The Cover Of This Issue:

Could there be a more accurate example of the necessary staples found in Italian thrillers? Blood. And Bare Beauties. This front cover shot from Black Belly Of The Tarantula says it all. See page 17 for the complete review. Regarding the back cover: talented Edwige Fenech is the Queen of The Giallos, her thrillers (especially the ones directed by Sergio Martino) are among the very best.

EDITORIAL

This is an issue of ETC unlike any previous one. There are no interviews, director filmographies, nude photos of comely Italian starlets, letters page... none of the features you have come to expect. Instead, there's only me. Over 30,000 words of me. It's my version of the mini-review trend. You've seen it utilized by Chas. Balun in his Deep Red and most recently in the debut issue of Asian Trash Cinema by Tom Weisser. But here's where I differ: I'm concentrating, not only on one Country - Italy - but one genre, the thriller or Giallo. If not for my love of this type of film, I doubt I could have finished in time (you try and watch over 100 films AND review them in 5 weeks!) Next issue will be back to normal as we explore the Cannibal World of Ruggero Deodato (through reviews, Interview and filmography), "expose" Barbara Bouchet, and hear what Riccardo Freda, Luigi Cozzi, and Lamberto Bava have to say.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT: ETC/ATC publisher, Tom Weisser, has written the definitive book on Spaghetti Westerns! It's titled Spaghetti Westerns, the Good, the Bad & the Violent: A Comprehensive, Illustrated Filmography of 600 Eurowesterns & Their Personnel. There are reviews for all 600+ films, plus credits. Along with a lengthy index, you'll find complete filmographies by director, composer, screenplay writer, actor... Hell, you name it! I had the honor of writing the Introduction and there is a Foreword by Tom Betts (Westerns All'Italiana) and Closing Comments by Bill Connolly (Spaghetti Cinema). Finally, a book on the subject for the fans (and not necessarily academia) to enjoy. It's scheduled as a Fall release, contact McFarland & Co. at Box 611, Jefferson, NC 28640, (919) 246-4460.

The Color Of Fear: GIALLO

compilation and reviews by Craig Ledbetter

INTRODUCTION

If you look up the term Giallo in an Italian language dictionary, you'll see that it's the color yello. Applied to film however, it means something all together different. Much like the term Film Noir, derived from the black covers of the Série Noir, to indicate the hard-boiled detective novel in France, giallo has its origins in Italian literature. It was the lurid yellow covers of these Italian mystery novels that now designates a certain type of thriller film in Italy.

In this overview that I have prepared for ETC, I have not limited myself to what "experts" might define strictly as a Giallo. Not all the films listed herein contain a killer, with black hat, gloves and overcoat, wiping out members of the cast. What I have tried to include are films that contain a killer, at least one victim, and a mystery element to be solved. I'm sure some titles have escaped my notice so, as always, feel free to write in with corrections and additions.

Ok, what possessed me to undertake this project and why? For one thing, BLOOD AND BLACK LACE was my introduction to the Italian horror film and it, along with DEATH LAID AN EGG (also reviewed in these pages), was responsible for my lifelong dementia for films of an Italian persuasion. Over the years I tried to view as many Italian horror films as possible, but growing up in Houston, Texas, it was strictly a hit or miss proposition. So few of these films ever played in a theater, that, were it not for Castle of Frankenstein and the odd issue of Famous Monsters, my mania for these films might have altogether died out.

Fortunately the invention of home video arrived. Yes, that much spat upon technology (especially by those who seem to only be able to enjoy a film when viewing it in a theater filled with drunks, drug addicts and people with bladder control problems) helped to re-introduce the films I saw as a youth and, more importantly, reveal here-to-fore unknown treasures that had never ever played this country. The early days of home video were a gold-mine for fans of Italo-exploitation as: the major movie companies had not yet decided to flood the market with their product, the Blockbuster video super stores had not yet destroyed the smaller outlets that carried hundreds of obscure titles instead of hundreds of the same film, video labels would release anything because the marketplace supported variety.

Things change however and the U.S. video market began to reflect the same demographics as the theatrical one. Fewer and fewer films with bigger and bigger budgets resulting in less riskier projects. The video market will no longer even release Italian Horror films (in a carbon copy atmosphere of the theatrical one), ironically, at time when Italian exploitation films feature U.S. actors exclusively, are filmed locally and are no longer even dubbed. In other words, they are now as shitty and bland as what's already being done here. It's a market that has been completely abandoned in the U.S. except for mail order houses like Video Search of Miami.

On a project like this, there has to be a starting point for gathering the information so one can expand and bring it up to date. In the seventies, French film expert Alain Petit was covering what has finally caught hold over here, some twenty years later. Thanks to Michael Secula, who photocopied a French edition of the Warren Magazines' Vampirella, I had that starting point. Inside that issue, mixed with French translations of the black and white horror comic, was a filmography of Italian thrillers. It featured films from 1963 to 1973, their credits and a short 3 to 4 sentence description. It was written by Petit and Jean-Marie Sabatier (the latter using the name "Jacques Catillon").

It opened my eyes up to just what I had been, and was still missing. It listed 62 films of which at the time I had only seen 8. I knew at that then that I had a lot of catching up to do! So, I went about finding these films on video, from England to Italy to Spain to Finland to, well, you get the idea. OK, I had spent all this time tracking them down, but at the same time I was also collecting thousands of other films in other genres.

I had all these thrillers, yet I realized one day that I had only watched very few. At that time you begin to wonder why are you into all this. Is the chase truly more important, more rewarding than sitting down and watching these films? No, that's stupid. With a vehicle like ETC, it seemed a pathetic waste to not detail what these films are, who made them and why are they so popular? I can't answer the latter, but I knew I could handle the first two.

I had originally planned on writing an overview in this introduction, detailing trends, recurring plot devices, the movers and shakers of the genre, et al., but quite frankly, it's all there in the reviews. So, rather than spoon feed you the information, I'll leave it for you to discover. I did learn that I still think of the Thriller as my favorite. How else could I have written so many reviews in such a short amount of time? I now have infinite respect for people like Chas. Balun and especially Tom Weisser who had to sit through all types of genres instead of being able to concentrate like I did, on one they truly loved.

Why do I find these types of films so enjoyable? Probably because they utilize all aspects of the movie-making process. It's not just a dependance on say, SPFX, like a SF film or splatter effects but a utilization of all types of talents. For example, musical scores by Bruno Nicolai or Ennio Morricone can so enhance a film, cleverly written or photographed that it elevates the work of all concerned. An absence of gore and nudity usually spells disaster for exploitation films, yet a film like Umberto Lenzi's SPASMO, which lacks those elements, overcomes it all with a brilliant script, direction, cinematography and musical score. It's just one of many examples you'll find in these films. If you really delve into the Italian film industry's history you will also discover the joys of spotting the people in front of and behind the camera. There is a consistent thread of actors and actresses that appear in this genre that, especially after watching over 100 of them, you'll learn to appreciate when they play against type.

Director-wise, Umberto Lenzi and Sergio Martino are the genre champions. Except for one misstep by Lenzi (EYEBALL), he and Martino consistently made stand out films. Especially Martino, who utilized actors (like Edwige Fenech and George Hilton), music (Bruno Nicolai), and cinematography (Giancarlo Ferrando) in ways that gave his films both style and substance. Argento is considered the maestro of the genre and it is he that has kept the genre alive all these years and is the one known by the fans today, but for a thriller with a story and bloody throat slashing effects, my money is on Martino.

I have only covered the films I have seen up to this date. There are dozens more that I have not caught up with, and didn't have the space to delve into further. Rest assured that I will return to the subject in the future with reviews of films I have seen and credits for those that have eluded my grasp.

Finally, a word of thanks to those who have helped me with information and visuals. Without their help, this work would not be nearly as complete: Alain Petit, Michael Secula, Horácio Higuchi, Jeff Segal, Tim Lucas, Ian Counce, Bob Sargent and Tom Weisser.

NOTES ON THE FOLLOWING TEXT

The entries are arranged chronologically and alphabetically [based on the original Italian title] within each year. The Italian titles are printed in bold; known English language titles are listed in caps directly beneath the Italian counterpart. For easier access to any film in the text, refer to the Contents (English Language List of Giallos) on page 6.

1963 LA RAGAZZA CHE SAPEVA TROPPO
THE EVIL EYE

Director: Mario Bava. Sc: Sergio Corbucci, Ennio De Concini, Eliana de Sabata, Mario Bava, Franco Prosperi & Mino Guerrini. Mus: Roberto Nicolosi (Les Baxter US version). Cast: Leticia Roman, John Saxon, Valentina Cortese.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Nora (Leticia Roman) arrives in Rome to visit her Aunt who isn't feeling well. When Auntie dies that night and Nora experiences a wild chain of events that lead to her witnessing a murder, the police, along with Dr. Bassi (John Saxon), are skeptical since there is no body. She ends up stay-with friends of her Aunt's, Laura Craven (Valentina Cortese) and her husband. Nora also learns about a series of murders that took place over the past ten years, dubbed The Alphabet Murders (the victims last names followed along like the letters of the alphabet). More murders occur before it is revealed that Laura herself is the killer (she also did in her sister) and it's not the "heroic" doctor who saves her, but Laura's near-to-death husband.

Considered the first true Giallo, the U.S. version contains some lame attempts at humor that knocks the rating down a ½ star. John Saxon makes for a lackluster leading man in this sly tribute to Alfred Hitchcock. The ending is priceless.

1964 SEI DONNE PER L'ASSASSINO
BLOOD AND BLACK LACE

Director: Mario Bava. Sc: Marcello Fondato, Giuseppe Barilla, Mario Bava. Mus: Carlo Rustichelli. Cast: Cameron Mitchell, Eva Bartok, Harriet White, Alan Collins (Luciano Pigozzi), Claudia Dantes.

Rating: ★★★☆

Comments: Isabella, a model at a swanky fashion salon, is murdered by a masked killer. When her diary is discovered by one of the other models, she too is eliminated. One by one they die until the diary is finally destroyed. The killer is actually two people, Max (Cameron Mitchell) and his rich lover the Countess (Eva Bartok). The diary contained the information that they killed the Countess' husband to get him out of their picture. As usual, Max gets greedy and tries to bump off the Countess, but the plan fails as she survives a fall from the second floor of her villa and pumps several bullets into Max's gut. Argento can deny that Bava was a major influence (as he has done in more recent interviews) all he wants, but one look at this film reminds one of what a huge debt he owes.

Even today this film amazes me with the cruelty shown during the murder sequences. Beautiful color photography helps usher in the bright sixties era that sets this genre apart from its Germanic roots (i.e. Film Noir). The gloved, masked assassin makes its initial appearance and soon became the standard accoutrements for all future Italo-killers.

The environment of the film (fashion studio) would continue to appear viable well into the eighties (OBSESSION: A TASTE FOR FEAR, NOTHING UNDERNEATH). Voice specialist Paul Frees dubs at least a half dozen characters.

1965 LIBIDO

Director: Ernesto Gastaldi & Vittorio Salerno. Sc: Ernesto Gastaldi & Vittorio Salerno. Mus: Carlo Rustichelli. Cast: Giancarlo Giannini, Mara Maryl, Dominique Boschero, Alan Collins.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: As a boy Christian sees his father murder his mistress. Twenty years later he takes his new bride Helene back to the place where the murder took place. His lawyer Paul (Alan Collins) and his wife Brigitte (Mara Maryl--she also wrote the story this film is based on) accompany them. Christian (Giannini) becomes convinced that Paul is trying to drive him insane so that he can take control of the inheritance. Too late, he discovers that actually Helene (Dominique Boschero) and Brigitte are the ones attempting to make him think he's insane.

Parts of this film turned up almost twenty years later in Gastaldi's & Salerno's NOTTORNO CON GRIDA. The footage was tinted and used in a completely different context. Stylish direction by Gastaldi & Salerno makes one wish they had done more work in that position, rather than concentrate on cranking out screenplays. Giancarlo Giannini was still a decade away from finding fame with Italian art-house fave director Lina Wertmüller, yet even here he hams it up for the camera.

1967 IL DOLCE CORPO DI DEBORAH
THE SWEET BODY OF DEBORAH

Director: Romolo Guerrieri. Sc: Ernesto Gastaldi. Mus: Nora Orlandi. Cast: Carroll Baker, Jean Sorel, Evelyn Stewart (Ida Galli), Luigi Pistilli, George Hilton.

Rating: ★★★☆

Comments: Take a look at that cast. Besides being the first of many thrillers to star BABY DOLL Carroll Baker, it reads like a future Who's Who in this genre. Deborah (Carroll Baker) and Marcel (Jean Sorel) are on their honeymoon. Upon returning home to Geneva, they meet Philip (Luigi Pistilli) who accuses Marcel of causing his girlfriend's suicide (Evelyn Stewart). Into the story enters Robert (George Hilton) as an artist neighbor who will figure strongly in the film's many twists and turns.

I promise not to reveal anymore, suffice to say, this is one of Gastaldi's more brilliant story constructions. The historical precedent of George Hilton turning out to NOT be what he appears to be, begins right here.

Director Guerrieri keeps a firm grip on the labyrinthine plot and does not fall prey to that dreaded desire by some directors of the times, to go "psychedelic." He directed one of the best Spaghetti Westerns, JOHNNY YUMA, and the more recent SciFi film, THE FINAL EXECUTIONER.

LA MORTE HA FATTO L'UOVO
DEATH LAID AN EGG

aka PLUCKED aka A CURIOUS WAY TO LOVE

Director: Giulio Questi. Sc: Giulio Questi, Franco Arcalli. Mus: Bruno Maderna. Cast: Jean-Louis Trintignant, Gina Lollobrigida, Ewa Aulin, Jean Sobieski.

Rating: ★★★★★

Comments: Marco (Jean-Louis Trintignant) is a chicken breeder who is married to the strong-willed Anna (Gina Lollobrigida). When her niece Gabriela (Ewa Aulin) comes to stay, Marco falls for her. They plot Anna's death but unbeknownst to Marco, Gabriela is secretly in love with Mondaini, who along with Gabriela, plans to murder both Marco and Anna. They succeed in knocking off Anna, but before they can set up Marco for the crime, he discovers the body and disposes of it. Unfortunately for Marco, he accidentally falls into the pulverizing machine. The police arrive, convinced that Gabriela and Mondaini (Jean Sobieski) have killed Marco and so set about to look for the body.

My favorite Euro-trash film ever. I have watched it dozens of times and have yet to ever tire of the many twists and turns served up by the film's labyrinthine plot. The cast has never been better, especially Trintignant who gives a performance that keeps you in the dark as to his true intentions.

Brilliantly directed and edited, the film's score will drive you nuts (yet it's appropriate). No way any plot synopsis could ever do this film justice. This film was discussed in the book CLUCK, the reference work on chickens in the cinema.

NUDE...SI MUORE

THE YOUNG, THE EVIL AND THE SAVAGE
aka SCHOOL GIRL KILLER

Director: Anthony M. Dawson (Antonio Margheriti). Sc: Antonio Margheriti, Franco Bottari. Mus: Carlo Savina. Cast: Michael Rennie, Mark Damon, Eleonor Brown, Alan Collins.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Students are being killed off at St. Hilda's, a finishing school for young girls. There are the usual suspects: a voyeuristic gardener (Alan Collins), fencing instructor De Brazzi, and young stud Richard (Mark Damon). Inspector Duran (Michael Rennie, in a performance that defines the term, wooden) finds out that Lucille (Eleonor Brown) is about to inherit a fortune and uncovers the fact that her cousin, a man, had killed the school's newly appointed teacher Miss Brown, and impersonated her so as to get close enough to Lucille to put her out of the picture. That old standby of Euro-horror films, the lime pit also makes an appearance. Rather tame for its time, my main problem with this film is the smirking performance by Mark Damon (something I've seen him do too many times in the past). You kind of hope he really is the killer just so they'll send his ass to jail. No such luck. Alan Collins (Luciano Pigozzi) is always referred to as the "Peter Lorre" of Italy. Whoever dubbed his voice in the English language version of Margheriti's MR. SUPER-INVISIBLE must have felt the same way as it sounds just like him.

1968 L'ASSASSINO HA LE MANE PULITE
aka OMICIDIO PER VOCAZIONE
DEADLY INHERITANCE

Director: Vittorio Sindoni. Sc: Romano Migliorini, Vittorio Sindoni, Aldo Bruno. Mus: Stefano Torossi. Cast: Femi Benussi, Tom Drake, Virginio Gazzolo, Ernesto Colli, Jeanette Lens.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Were it not for Femi Benussi's shower scene, this sucker would rate one star. Old man Oscar, is killed while working for the railroad company. His 3 daughters and idiot adopted son learn that ol' Oscar had a sizeable fortune. The catch is that until Janot (the idiot son) reaches 21 (he's currently 18) they get nada. Daughter number one, Simone (Femi Benussi) is having an affair with Jules, the owner of a club that plays bad imitation rock music. Rosalie (Jeanette Lens) is married to a loud mouth asshole named Leon. Colette, the youngest, is pretty much the typical airheaded blonde. Before you know it, people start getting killed left and right. First Janot, then Rosalie, her boorish husband Leon and finally Colette. Inspector Gerard (Tom Drake) has his hands full trying to figure out who the killer is. In true plot twist fashion, it turns out that Janot was the mastermind behind it all. He stole Oscar's body and used it to fake his death. He then went after the rest of the cast until only Simone was left. He needed her alive to get the money (after which he intended to kill her). As a last minute kicker we see that Janot's helper in all this was Lt. Gerard. Simone ends up killing him (Janot was offed by another cop) and walks off into the sunset.

Fast forward buttons were made for films like this! What is the star of THE CYCLOPS, HOUSE OF BLACK DEATH and THE SPECTRE OF EDGAR ALLAN POE, Tom Drake, doing in this? From the looks of it, trying to make enough for that next bottle of hooch. Tom, did you get that toupee from Paul Naschy or did something die on top of your head? I will give Ernesto Colli high marks for playing the creepy Janot. Fortunately looking like a cretin helps sell the performance. And what is composer Silvano Spadaccini (SLAUGHTER HOTEL) doing playing a hysterical truck driver?

LA MORTE NON HA SESSO

DEATH HAS NO SEX aka A BLACK VEIL FOR LISA

Director: Massimo Dallamano. Sc: Massimo Dallamano, Petrilli & Belli. Mus: Giovanni Fusco. Cast: John Mills, Luciana Paluzzi, Robert Hoffmann.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: John Mills plays an insanely jealous husband who is a detective involved in the Narcotics division. Luciana Paluzzi is his beautiful wife Lisa with a criminal past and a predilection for screwing around on her husband. In steps handsome Robert Hoffmann as a hit-man who is hired by Mills to kill off Paluzzi. Hoffmann ends up falling in love with Lisa and conspiring with her to double-cross Mills. It all ends with Lisa in "mourning" for both Hoffmann and Mills. A disappointment coming from director Dallamano, he would go on to do much better work in the genre. He got his start photographing the early Westerns of Sergio Leone (under the name Jack Dalmás). This film is more like a TV police melodrama than a stylish thriller. The score by Giovanni Fusco doesn't help either as it sounds like something Lalo Schiffrin might concoct. Although Mills, Paluzzi and Hoffmann dub their own voices, Veteran voice-maestro Paul Frees is heard as the voice of at least 6 different characters (much like the work he performed in Bava's BLOOD AND BLACK LACE). Paluzzi was much better in 1968's THE GREEN SLIME.

ORGASMO
PARANOIA

Director: Umberto Lenzi. Sc: Umberto Lenzi, Ugo Moretti, Marie-Claire Solleville. Mus: Piero Umiliani.
Cast: Carroll Baker, Lou Castel, Colette Descombes

Rating: ★★

Comments: Don't confuse this title with PARANOIA, a later Lenzi thriller that played here as A QUIET PLACE TO KILL. This was one of the first X-rated films I saw as a young lad. It was so rated because of the many nude shots of the two female leads. At the time, that was enough for me. These days, I find the film severely lacking in many categories. In a plot that found its way into many other Lenzi films, aging Carroll Baker becomes infatuated with a younger man, only to have the affair eventually turn into her worst nightmare.

1969 A DOPPIA FACCIA
DOUBLE FACE

Director: Riccardo Freda. Sc: Romano Migliorini, Giovannibattista Mussetto, Lucio Fulci, Riccardo Freda.
Music: Joan Christian. Cast: Klaus Kinski, Margaret Lee, Kristiane Kruger, Sidney Chaplin.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Tangentially based on Edgar Wallace's story The Face in the Night, DOUBLE FACE is a victim of the times it was made in. Lots of bad sixties "rock" music and dizzying camera work, this has to be one of Freda's weakest films. The version out here on Unicorn video is missing all the nudity that makes this boring affair the least bit tolerable.

The film revolves around Klaus's quest to discover if his wife is really dead. One of this film's screen writers (Lucio Fulci) made a much better version of this plot-line the same year (ONE ON TOP OF THE OTHER).

COSÌ DOLCE, COSÌ PERVERSA SO SWEET, SO PERVERSE

Director: Umberto Lenzi. Sc: Ernesto Gastaldi, Massimo D'Avack. Mus: Riz Ortolani. Cast: Jean-Louis Trintignant, Erika Blanc, Carroll Baker, Horst Frank, Helga Liné.

Rating: ★★☆

Comments: Here's another thriller where you almost need a scorecard to keep track of who's double-crossing who. Erika Blanc plays J.L.T.'s lesbian wife while Carroll Baker may be her or J.L.T.'s lover. Everyone (including Horst Frank) is plotting to kill each other off and the only reason to stick around till the end is to see who is left standing. Helga Liné has a nice cameo as a rich man's wife also attracted to both sexes. Nothing special.

IL ROSSO SEGNO DELLA FOLLIA HATCHET FOR A HONEYMOON

Director: Mario Bava. Sc: Mario Bava, Santiago Moncada, Mario Musy. Mus: Sante Romitelli. Cast: Stephen Forsyth, Laura Betti, Femi Benussi, Alan Collins, Dagmar Lassander.

Rating: ★★☆

Comments: The plot of this film (like so many psychological horror films) owes a lot to PSYCHO. Forsyth kills women in wedding attire and with each murder, his recurring vision from childhood of who killed his mother becomes clearer. You'd have to be brain dead to not realize who that murderer is. The rating was docked a half-a-star since the only version I've seen is the TV version out here on video. A great cast is somewhat wasted on this exploration of the Hell of a bad marriage. Laura Betti's performance as the wife is like listening to someone drag their fingernails across a blackboard (for another Betti Bitch performance, see Sergio Corbucci's BANDERA BANDITS). You certainly can't sympathize with Forsyth's character, no matter how tortured. I mean, he killed off Femi Benussi, for Chrissakes!

L'UCCELLO DALLE PIUME DI CRISTALLO THE BIRD WITH THE CRYSTAL PLUMAGE

Director: Dario Argento. Sc: Dario Argento. Mus: Ennio Morricone. Cast: Tony Musante, Suzy Kendall, Eva Renzi, Enrico Maria Salerno, Mario Adorf.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Artist Tony Musante witnesses a murder and spends the balance of the film trying to remember a crucial detail that would reveal the killer's true identity. This plot device would become a common thread in Argento's work up to and including OPERA. Over the years he would shift his focus towards female characters. Much like the fact that there are no bad Sergio Leone westerns, the same holds true for Argento's giallos. This effort was more plot-driven than his later works and is all the stronger for it.

His next film, IL GATTO A NOVE CODE [CAT O' NINE TAILS] would actually suffer from trying to cram too many ideas into one film. The scores by Ennio Morricone to the first three Argento films makes the later "scores" filled with flavor-of-the-month Heavy Metal shit all the more regrettable. Mario Adorf as the cat eating artist steals (and stops) the film.

UNA SULL'ALTRA

ONE ON TOP OF THE OTHER

Director: Lucio Fulci. Sc: Lucio Fulci, Roberto Gianviti, Jose Luis Martinez Molla. Mus: Riz Ortolani. Cast: Jean Sorel, Marisa Mell, Elsa Martinelli, Alberto De Mendoza, Jean Sobieski, John Ireland, Faith Domergue, Jorge Rigaud.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Sorel's wife (Mell) is found dead and the police suspect that he poisoned her. He is sentenced to die in the gas chamber for his crime. It's up to his mistress (Martinelli) and best friend (Sobieski) to collect the evidence to free him in time. A strong plot-driven thriller in the Hitchcock tradition (and one that has been completely abandoned in these gore-soaked times) that is a joy to try and outguess. Sorel is especially impressive in a role that, at first, one has little sympathy for. As the film proceeds, Sorel is able to elicit concern for his future so that by film's end, you really hope he doesn't get executed by the State. Marisa Mell has rarely been better in a dual role that showcases two different personas. The nude scenes ain't bad either.

1970 CINQUE BAMBOLE PER LA LUNA D'AGOSTO 5 DOLLS FOR AN AUGUST MOON

Director: Mario Bava. Sc: Mario Di Nardo. Mus: Piero Umiliani. Cast: William Berger, Ira Furstenberg, Edwige Fenech, Howard Ross (Renato Rossini).

Rating: ★★★ DAMMIT!

Comments: Here's a film that gets no respect. It is usually singled out as Bava's worst film. Not so. It may reveal a lazy technician (too many zooms), but a talented one none the less. The cast is a dream come true for giallo fans as many here went on to specialize in the genre. Professor Farrell (William Berger), along with several others, is a guest at George's island retreat. The prof has developed a synthetic resin that George and other industrialists would like to get their hands on. Numerous people die that weekend in vain attempts to gain access to the formula. Even the professor has a skeleton in his closet, for which he ends up going to prison.

A variation on Agatha Christie's TEN LITTLE INDIANS, the film's main highlights include the bodies, wrapped in plastic bags and stored in the walk-in freezer, George's quick appearance in a golden devil mask, and a shit load of marbles being dumped across the floor. Certainly, one of the least atmospheric of all Bava films, it helps to keep things light and breezy. And, I love that kitchy score by Piero Umiliani!

CONCERTO PER PISTOLA SOLISTA THE WEEKEND MURDERS

Director: Michele Lupo. Sc: Sergio Donati. Mus: Francesco De Masi. Cast: Anna Moffo, Lance Percival, Gastone Moschin, Evelyn Stewart, Giacomo Rossi-Stuart, Orchidea de Santis.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: The closest the Italians ever got to a straight Agatha Christie-type mystery thriller was this delightful film. A large family is called together for the reading of the Patriarch's will.

They are all disgusted to find everything is left to favored daughter Moffo. Before long the cast begins to shrink as a maniac has devised numerous methods to pare down the potential family survivors. Lance Percival, as the stuffy and idiotic Scotland Yard detective, along with local bobby Gastone Moschin, who, while brighter gets no respect from anyone, steal the film with their Monty Python-type humor. Evelyn Stewart once again gets knocked off well before the film's end. Orchidea de Santis is ravishing as the maid who drives the male cast to distraction. Francesco De Masi's main theme (bombastically played on piano) is the origins for the off-the-wall original Italian title. Who's the killer? Why Moffo of course. It seems there was a later will that wrote her out of the inheritance entirely and so she was forced to kill the remaining family members in case the new document was found.

ECOLOGIA DEL DELITTO

BAY OF BLOOD aka TWITCH OF THE DEATH NERVE

Director: Mario Bava. Sc: Mario Bava, Giuseppe Zaccariella Filippo Ottoni. Mus: Stelvio Cipriani. Cast: Luigi Pistilli, Claudine Auger, Claudio Volonte, Laura Betti, Chris Avram, Brigitte Skay.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Owner of a bayfront property, the Countess, is killed by her no-good husband. He in turn is killed, throwing ownership of the area up for grabs. The Count's daughter Renata (Claudine Auger) and her husband Albert (Luigi Pistilli) arrive and the squabbles begin. Slasher fodder is provided when Brunhilda (Brigitte Skay) and her hippie friends decide to spend the night in an abandoned cottage. Before they are killed, we are treated to Skay's totally gratuitous nude swim. The plot really gets complicated as the film flashes back and forth to reveal the fact that several different murderers were at work. However, Renata and Albert are the main culprits and after wiping out everyone, they are greeted with twin shotgun blasts from their precocious kids, who compliment them for being such good corpses.

The only meaning this film has for gorehounds today is the fact that FRIDAY THE 13TH PART 2 ripped off most of the more stylish murders for its setpieces. A shame really as the film reveals the prankster side of Bava. It had to be a perverse mind to setup that wonderful ending. The opening double murder sequence has rarely been topped. Much like Howard Ross, Chris Avram has made a career out of playing scumbags.

IL GATTO A NOVE CODE

THE CAT O'NINE TAILS

Director: Dario Argento. Sc: Dardano Sacchetti & Dario Argento. Mus: Ennio Morricone. Cast: James Franciscus, Karl Malden, Catherine Spaak, Rada Rassimov, Horst Frank, Werner Pochath.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Sightless Karl Malden and his young ward team-up with reporter James Franciscus to uncover the maniac killer working behind the scenes at a bio-chemical scientific research facility.

They discover that there are nine clues and nine suspects. After one of the scientists' mistresses is killed, they raid her tomb and find a piece of paper which incriminates one of the young scientists, revealing he possesses a set of damaged chromosomes indicating he has homicidal tendencies. The acting in this film is among the best to appear in an Argento film. Malden and Franciscus make a likeable duo. There's far too much talk for my liking, still it's better than PHENOMENA. The nude love scene between Spaak and Franciscus is as un-erotic as these things can get.

LA MORTE RISALE A IERI SERA

DEATH OCCURRED LAST NIGHT

Director: Duccio Tessari. Sc: Duccio Tessari, Biagio Proietta, Arthur Brauner. Mus: Gianni Ferrio. Cast: Raf Vallone, Frank Wolff, Gabriele Tinti, Beryl Cunningham, Eva Renzi.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Raf Vallone gives a strong performance as a father tracking down his daughter's killers. He kept her locked up in their apartment because she was mentally retarded. Unfortunately she had a curiosity about sex and was soon kidnapped by a local pimp. She was killed when her mental condition was discovered. Frank Wolff (who never gave a poor performance in any of his films) plays a cop who is also trying to locate the murderers before Vallone. Raf tracks them down and brutally kills them. Tessari is one of the better Italo-genre directors. He usually specialized in Westerns (the Ringo films with Giuliano Gemma) though his two thrillers (see also UNA FARFALLA CON LE ALI INSANGUINATE [BLOOD STAINED BUTTERFLY]) show he could have just as easily specialized in them. Gianni Ferrio's score is one of the best. Black actress Beryl Cunningham made numerous appearances throughout the sixties and seventies, most notably starring in two films by Piero (SATANIK) Vivarelli, BLACK DECAMERON & IL DIO SERPENTE. And of course Frank Wolff's character has to be suffering from some type of misery (here it's sinus problems) in an effort to humanize him. Unhappiness, obsession and loneliness are the themes that stand out in this thoughtful variation.

NELLE PIEGHE DELLA CARNE

THE FOLDS OF THE FLESH

Director: Sergio Bergonzelli. Sc: Sergio Bergonzelli, Mario Caiano, De Agostini. Mus: Jesus Villa Rojo.

Cast: Anna Maria Pierangeli, Eleonora Rossi Drago, Fernando Sancho.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: When watching this one you'll have to take notes to figure out what the Hell is going on. It's totally confusing and engrossing at the same time, there are enough sleazy goings on to get you over the rough (ie, boring) spots. There are flesh-eating vultures, incestuous relationships, a crude beheading and more. The film's low-point is reached when we get to see Fernando Sancho take a bath! This man should NEVER appear nude on film. It gives new meaning to the title, Folds Of The Flesh.

PARANOIA

A QUIET PLACE TO KILL

Director: Umberto Lenzi. Sc: Rafael Marchent, Marcello Goscia, Bruno Di Geronimo, Marie-Claire Solle-ville. Mus: Gregory Garcia Segura. Cast: Carroll Baker, Jean Sorel, Luis Davila, Alberto Dalbes, Marina Coffa, Anna Proclemer.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Helen (Carroll Baker) receives word from her ex-husband Maurice (Jean Sorel) to join him at his villa in Majorca, Spain. When she arrives, she finds out that it was actually Constance (Marina Coffa) who summoned her. It seems she knows that Helen attempted to kill Maurice when they were married and she wants to enlist Baker's help in knocking him off again. The tables turn on Constance when during the attempt, it is she that is killed instead. Constance's daughter Susan (Anna Proclemer), arrives to discover her mother's fate and instantly suspects Helen and Maurice of foul play. The joke turns out to be on Helen as Maurice and Susan are actually lovers and it was they who planned Constance's and now her death (in a car crash). Just when these two think they have pulled it all off, Constance's body (wrapped in chains and tied to an anchor) is found. The film is all plot as there is no nudity or violence to be found here. The countryside is presented in documentary fashion as we follow the characters from beach to pool. The problem is that nothing much happens in between these wanderings. If there were a bumbling detective around you'd swear you were watching an episode of TV's Columbo.

LO STRANO VIZIO DELLA SIGNORA WARDH

BLADE OF THE RIPPER aka NEXT

Director: Sergio Martino. Sc: Eduardo Brochero, Ernesto Gastaldi. Mus: Bruno Nicolai. Cast: Edwige Fenech, George Hilton, Ivan Rassimov, Alberto De Mendoza.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: You can't go wrong with a Sergio Martino thriller. None of his films in this genre rate less than 3 and ½ stars. Fenech makes a stunning debut as the victim of a plot to drive her mad. Alberto De Mendoza plays a good guy here, but he can play the flip-side as well (see UN SULL'ALTRA [ONE ON TOP OF THE OTHER]). Ivan Rassimov's features (much like Gordon Mitchell) type him as the perennial slimeball and Martino uses that fact to full effect here. Finally, after you watch enough of these films you learn to ALWAYS suspect that George Hilton will be revealed as the killer.

IL TUO DOLCE CORPO DA UCCIDERE

(no known English Language title)

Director: Alfonso Brescia. Sc: Antonio Fos. Mus: Carlo Savina. Cast: Giorgio Ardisson, Francoise Prevost, Orchidea de Santis, Eduardo Fajardo.

Rating: ★

Comments: You know you're in trouble when you see who the director is. I think Brescia could fuck up a wet dream. This film is a cross between a border line thriller and SECRET LIFE OF WALTER MITTY (a match made in Hell, I know). Clive (Giorgio Ardisson) is a role better suited for Terry-Thomas) fantasizes about ways of torturing and killing his shrewish, bitch of a wife. She instructs him on every facet of his life and he has had enough. He knows she is having an affair with their physician Franz (Eduardo Fajardo), so he gets some dirt on the good doctor and bribes him into killing Diana (Francoise Prevost). Franz cuts her up and puts the parts into two suitcases that Clive takes with him on a business trip to Tangier. There he plans on disposing of the suitcases and be rid of Diana, once and for all. Unfortunately for the viewers, a lame comedy device is introduced with one of the suitcases being accidentally switched with Eleonora (Orchidea de Santis), a girl he met on the plane. The balance of the film is spent with Clive trying to get the suitcase back without alarming the local police, who are watching his every move to see what he's up to. In rapid fashion we learn Clive accidentally kill a policeman, discover his wife is not really dead (she and the doctor were in on it from the start), and get arrested for the former incident. The film ends with the Fajardo character listening to Diana bark out an endless stream of instructions as he contemplates actually dismembering and stuffing her in those luggage bags.

L'UOMO DAGLI OCCHI DI GHIACCIO

THE MAN WITH THE ICY EYES

Director: Alberto De Martino. Sc: Massimo De Rita, Arduino Maiuri, Vincenzo Mannino, Alberto De Martino, Adriano Bolzoni. Mus: Peppino De Luca. Cast: Antonio Sabato, Victor Buono, Barbara Bouchet, Keenan Wynn, Faith Domergue, Corrado Gaipa.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Here's a thriller that should please the assassination conspiracy buffs out there. Senator Robertson has been killed at his front door step. A reporter for the Hammond Sentinel, named Mills (Antonio Sabato) is assigned to write a personality piece on the dead man. An ex-convict named Valdez (Corrado Gaipa) is the most likely suspect and with Mills help in uncovering evidence, he is arrested. When Mills later discovers that Valdez may have been framed, he makes an all out effort to find out who the real killer is. The Man With The Icy Eyes (which is how the killer was described) is actually a person in the government who has his "eyes" on bettering his position.

The film was shot in New Mexico and De Martino uses the state's desolate countryside to emphasize the moral vacancy needed to pull off such a heinous crime. I know, I lived there for two LONG years. The cast is filled with Hollywood veterans from Wynn to Buono (who is dubbed woefully inept by a constipated actor) to Howard Hughes' ex-mistress, Faith Domergue. An excellent musical score by Peppino De Luca makes me wonder why he wasn't more prolific.

1971 LA BESTIA UCCIDE A SANGUE FREDDO SLAUGHTER HOTEL

Director: Fernando Di Leo. Sc: Fernando Di Leo, Nino Latino. Mus: Silvano Spadaccino. Cast: Klaus Kinski, Margaret Lee, Rosalba Neri, Monica Stöbel, John Karlson.

Rating: ★★☆☆ a True Guilty Pleasure!!

Comments: I love this thoroughly unredeeming film. It's all over the place as it veers from a gothic-styled chiller to pure sexploitation to an ending that reflects the times' fascination with violence (in the American advertising for the film tried to capitalize on killer Richard Speck's mass murder of eight nurses). Di Leo made his name scripting some of the better examples of the Spaghetti Western field (NAVAJO JOE, MASSACRE TIME). From there he moved on to make his name in Crime Films (BOSS, MILAN CALIBER 9). His brief flirtation with the Horror genre makes me regret he didn't try his hand at more. They may have not been any good, but I'm sure they would have been trashy fun. Kinski stars as a doctor at the local sanitarium, trying to cure his female clientele whilst a murderer is lowering their number. Although Margaret Lee has the female lead (and like every other female in the cast, a number of nude scenes), it's Rosalba Neri, as a nymphomaniac, who steals the show. The US release is longer than many others in circulation, however a French Video version has graphic female masturbation sequences crudely inserted (oops, sorry about that) throughout.

LA CODA DELLO SCORPIONE THE TAIL OF THE SCORPION

Director: Sergio Martino. Sc: Ernesto Gastaldi, Eduardo Brochero, Sauro Scavolini. Mus: Bruno Nicolai.

Cast: George Hilton, Anita Strindberg, Evelyn Stewart, Janine Reynaud, Luigi Pistilli, Albert De Mendoza, Luis Barboo.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: If I had access to an English language print of this film, I can almost assure you the rating would be 4 stars. In a sly nod to PSYCHO, Sergio Martino knocks off would be heroine Evelyn Stewart a quarter of the way into the film. Anita Strindberg enters and spends the balance of the film trying to figure out who is attempting to have her join Stewart's fate (remember, George Hilton is in the cast!). Janine Reynaud and Luis Barboo (two veterans of Jesus Franco films) are a deadly duo who turn out to be red herrings. The title comes from the elaborate super-hero like clothing worn by the killer.

Euro ad-mat for Sergio Martino's Tail Of The Scorpion

COSA AVETE FATTO A SOLANGE? WHAT HAVE THEY DONE TO SOLANGE?

Director: Massimo Dallamano. Sc: Massimo Dallamano, Bruno Di Geronimo. Mus: Ennio Morricone. Cast: Fabio Testi, Christina Galbó, Karin Baal, Joachim Fuchsberger, Camille Keaton.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Fabio Testi is a womanizing professor who enjoys the sexual favors of his female students. When they start turning up dead, he is the main suspect. The killer turns out to be the distraught father of the titled character who takes revenge on her promiscuous friends. It seems she had an abortion and because of the trauma involved with the operation, has since become a vegetable.

A really wonderful film, filled with all the elements that go into a successful thriller. The appearance of Joachim Fuchsberger as a police inspector is about the only hint that this film was based on the Edgar Wallace novel, The Secret of the Green Pin (Fuchsberger was a mainstay of the German series in the sixties). Obviously the Italian giallo had replaced the once prolific Krimis. Testi has always been a mostly wooden leading man but here he gets a chance to do some acting. He starts off as an unlikable character who truly learns to appreciate his neglected wife during the tragedy that takes place around him. Rarely do we see a character mature before our very eyes. Camille Keaton does NOT impress in her role as Solange (a fact true of all her European work). Joe D'Amato (Aristide Massaccesi) contributes some excellent cinematography and even cameos as a policeman.

IL DIAVOLO A SETTE FACCE THE DEVIL HAS 7 FACES

Director: Osvaldo Civirani. Sc: Osvaldo Civirani, Tito Carpi. Mus: Stelvio Cipriani. Cast: Carroll Baker, George Hilton, Stephen Boyd, Lucretia Love, Alan Collins.

Rating: ★

Comments: What a waste of a good cast! Don't let the principals involved fool you, this is really nothing more than a melodrama involving a robbery and the double-crosses involved after the fact. The only redeeming feature of this film is the score by Cipriani. I've yet to see a film by Civirani that I liked (he usually edits and his brother photographs).

I DUE VOLTI DI PAURA

(no known English Language title)

Director: Tulio Demichelli. Sc: Pedro Herrero, Mario Di Nardo. Mus: Franco Micalizzi. Cast: George Hilton, Luciana Paluzzi, Fernando Rey, Anita Strindberg, Luis Davila, Eduardo Fajardo.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Murder in the medical profession is the milieu for a change of pace with this thriller. When Dr. Azzini is killed suspicion quickly falls on four of his colleagues. As usual for this genre, all the male and female characters have either had or are currently having affairs with one another. The Italians love their sexual politics confused. If you're wondering who the killer is, need I remind you who the star of this film is?!

L'ETRUSCO UCCIDE ANCORA THE ETRUSCAN KILLS AGAIN aka THE DEAD ARE ALIVE

Director: Armando Crispino. Sc: Armando Crispino, Lucio Battistrada. Mus: Riz Ortolani. Cast: Alex Cord, Samantha Eggar, Horst Frank, John Marley.

Rating: ★☆☆

Comments: Compared to Crispino's AUTOPSY, this film is quite a come down. Everything about this film reeks of deception, beginning with the title (there is no Etruscan-like zombie doing the killing, only one of the members of the cast) and carrying on to the film's denouement. Alex Cord and Samantha Eggar do not make for a very photogenic couple, both obviously wanting to be somewhere else. Only Horst Frank survives with his performance intact. He has always struck me as representing the banality of evil.

UNA FARFALLA CON LE ALI INSANGUINATE
THE BLOOD STAINED BUTTERFLY

Director: Duccio Tessari. Sc: Gianfranco Clerici, Duccio Tessari. Mus: Gianni Ferrio. Cast: Helmut Berger, Evelyn Stewart, Carole Andre, Silvano Tranquilli.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: If not for the overwrought performance by Helmut Berger, this one would have easily been rated ★★★★★. It's that good. A young girl has her throat slashed in a wooded area during a heavy downpour. Though the killer escapes, there are quite a few witnesses who think they can identify him. Detailed crime scene analysis along with the eye-witness testimony pegs the murderer as a sportscaster named Alessandro. Unfortunately for him, his wife (Evelyn Stewart) and lawyer are having an affair and are using the trial to get Alessandro out of the picture. He's found guilty and given life imprisonment. However the murders continue to occur in the same wooded area. This plus new evidence, causes Alessandro to be released. It turns out that the first victim was the girlfriend of piano virtuoso Giorgio (Helmut Berger). When he discovered that Alessandro really did kill the girl, he committed two murders just so the sportscaster would be released and he could shoot him down in cold blood.

In gathering the data for this project, it was rewarding to discover certain behind the scenes personnel who have been overlooked in the past. Screenplay writer Gianfranco Clerici's main claim to fame (or infamy) was as the screenplay writer for Deodato's CANNIBAL HOLOCAUST. In fact, he (along with Ernesto Gastaldi) can lay claim to be the best toiling in the Giallo salt-mines. The structure of this film, mixing both the present and the past is brilliant. Director Tessari also goes into great detail about the actual procedures used by crime labs and the technicians involved doing the work. Gianni Ferrio's use of Tchaikovsky's Thematic Concerto #1 for piano emphasizes Giorgio's torment and descent into madness. Interestingly, Francesco De Masi used this same piece of music (for comic effect) in THE WEEKEND MURDERS. Silvano Tranquilli plays the harried police inspector who spends the entire film trying to get a decent cup of coffee. Much more could be written about this gem.

GIORNATA NERA PER L'ARIETE
THE FIFTH CORD aka EVIL FINGERS

Director: Luigi Bazzoni. Sc: Mario Di Nardo, Luigi Bazzoni Mario Fenelli. Mus: Ennio Morricone. Cast: Franco Nero, Silvia Monti, Pamela Tiffin, Ira Furstenberg, Wolfgang Preiss, Edmund Purdom.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Here's one that will keep you guessing up to the very end. The opening shot of a deranged voice coming over a phone line foreshadows the beginning sequence in TENEBRAE. Franco Nero (who gets to dub his own voice) is an alcoholic newspaperman, Andrea Bild who finds himself implicated in a murder plot. John Lubbock is attacked after walking home with his ex-girlfriend, Isabel. Andrea is discouraged by the police and Dr. Bini from probing too deep into the attack. Dr. Bini's wife is killed after Andrea interviews her thus throwing suspicion onto the reporter. Next to die are Andrea's boss, Lubbock's girlfriend and one of the witnesses (Julia) to the original beating. The ending reveals that John is the murderer. He was beaten up by Julia's father because John was blackmailing the old man over the fact that she appeared in live sex shows (setup by Dr. Bini (Wolfgang Preiss) for his rich clients). While recovering from the battering, John decided to kill his philandering girlfriend, Isabel. The other killings were done to incriminate Andrea. Andrea uses astrology (?) to uncover the real murderer.

Wolfgang Preiss is especially good as a physician (No, NOT Dr. Mabuse) who is almost as spooky as the real murderer. Filmmaker Luigi Bazzoni is a talented yet quirky director. His films always look impeccable (Cinematography here is by future Oscar winner for Coppola's THE GODFATHER, Vittorio Storaro) but don't always connect (see his LE ORME available in the USA from Force Video as PRIMAL IMPULSE).

L'IGUANA DALLA LINGUA DI FUOCO
THE IGUANA WITH A TONGUE OF FIRE

Director: Willy Paretto (Riccardo Freda). Sc: Riccardo Freda, Sandro Continenza. Mus: Stelvio Cipriani. Cast: Luigi Pistilli, Dagmar Lassander, Anton Diffring, Valentina Cortese, Dominique Boschero, Werner Pochath.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Director Freda may not think much of this film, but I happen to rate it rather highly. It takes place in Ireland (and star Luigi Pistilli is dubbed with a very appropriate Irish brogue) and the film's exteriors do a nice job of highlighting it. There are graphic murder sequences involving a nasty slit throat and disfigurement with acid (both spotlighted in grisly closeups). Luigi Pistilli gets to shine in a leading man role that he rarely got to play. He even gets to roll around in the sheets with Dagmar Lassander. To see the old and haggard looking Lassander in Fulci's HOUSE BY THE CEMETERY after viewing her youthful appearance here, you realize she must have lived a rather debauched life in-between. Stelvio Cipriani's score really adds to the film's ambience.

The plot revolves around Ambassador Sobieski (Anton Diffring) and his family. Associates of his begin turning up dead (like his lovers, driver, friends, etc) and it's up to Inspector Norton (Pistilli) to sort out the guilty party. As it turns out, Sobieski's ugly son (played by Werner Pochath) is the killer, but we also learn that Sobieski took advantage of the situation to kill a venal mistress (Dominique Boschero). Of course, the fake dummy makes an appearance at film's end!

UNA LUCERTOLA CON LA PELLE DI DONNA
A LIZARD IN A WOMAN'S SKIN

Director: Lucio Fulci. Sc: Lucio Fulci. Mus: Ennio Morricone. Cast: Florinda Bolkan, Stanley Baker, Jean Sorel, Alberto De Mendoza, Anita Strindberg, Jorge Rigaud, Leo Genn.

Rating: ★★☆☆

FLORINDA BOLKAN
STANLEY BAKER • JEAN SOREL

Una Lagartija CON PIEL DE MUJER

con ALBERTO DE MENDOZA
MIKE KENNEDY • SILVIA MONTI
ANITA STRINDBERG
Y CON LEO GENN
DIRECTOR LUCIO FULCI

Comments: Carol Hammond (Florinda Bolkan) tells her psychiatrist about her dream of murdering her next door neighbor Julia (Anita Strindberg). When the neighbor turns up dead and Carol's fur coat and dagger are found near the body, Inspector Corvin (Stanley Baker) arrests her. Her husband (Jean Sorel) and father (Leo Genn) are both lawyers and base their case on the testimony of Carol's psychiatrist (Jorge Rigaud), Dr. Kerr. It allows her to be released on bail where she is soon menaced by a red-haired hippie that also appeared in her dream. More deaths occur (including Carol's step-daughter and father) before it is revealed that Carol did kill the neighbor because she was going to go to Mr. Hammond and inform him of their lesbian affair. Stanley Baker's role as Corvin redefines the term "wooden performance" with his appearance in this one. Geez, what a stiff!!

Mostly known for its infamous dog "evisceration" scene by Carlo Rambaldi, the film features Fulci's truly paranoid vision of how the Sixties generation screwed up. His laughably unenlightened view of what constitutes a bad LSD trip is comparable to REEFER MADNESS during the thirties. There are a lot of highlights anyway, including another fine score by Morricone and a superlative performance by Florinda Bolkan as the murderess. Anita Strindberg as the lesbian/murder victim shows her adept at playing sluts, bitches, saints, murderess or victim. Fulci's shining moments as a director come during the dream sequences. They are quite effective. Unfortunately, much is cut for the American version (get the Euro version, mail order).

MIO CARO ASSASSINO MY DEAR ASSASSIN

Director: Tonino Valerii. Sc: Franco Bucci, Roberto Leoni, Tonino Valerii, Jose Maesso. Mus: Ennio Morricone. Cast: George Hilton, William Berger, Patty Shepard, Marilu Tolo, Piero Lulli, Helga Liné.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: The problem with this review is that it's based on a French language print and there's a LOT of dialogue (which is a handicap for this type of film no matter what language it might be in). So plot details will be sketchy. A series of murders take place to hide the identity of a child killer. As cast members discover who it is they are quickly dispatched. George Hilton plays a police detective (and for once he's NOT the killer!) who throughout the film displays his genius at solving crimes based on the evidence found at the scene. The killer is revealed by Hilton as he forces each of the surviving cast members to look into a mirror that belonged to the long ago murdered child. On the back she had drawn in chalk a picture of the guilty party. Ennio Morricone uses a child's humming to set the mood for this elegiac somber film. However those looking for a score rich in thematic material, will be disappointed. This time Morricone is using a very atonal approach to indicate the mind set of the maniac. Director Tonino Valerii pays tribute to his roots in the Spaghetti Western genre (he directed DAY OF ANGER and PRICE OF POWER; he would be picked by Leone to direct MY NAME IS NOBODY) by having a character watch DJANGO on TV.

Valerii also doesn't flinch from showing the red stuff during the murders. Right off the bat we have a graphic decapitation and later in the film the killer uses a portable circular saw to really chew up the front and back of a victim (of course it takes place in the bathroom). Helga Liné has a cameo as the wife of the first victim and her demise, compared to her husband's is quite subdued (she's strangled). And how about that Marilu Tulo (she plays Hilton's lover), has she got Brooke Shield's eyebrows-from-Hell or what?!

LA MORTE CAMMINA CON I TACCHI ALTI
DEATH WALKS IN HIGH HEELS

Director: Luciano Ercoli. Sc: Manuel Velasco, Ernesto Gastaldi, Dino Verde. Mus: Stelvio Cipriani.

Cast: Susan Scott (Nieves Navarro [Fernando Di Leo suggested she change her name to S.S.]), Frank Wolff, Simon Andreu, Jorge Rigaud.

Rating: ★★☆

Comments: A spectacularly talky film (and like all of Ercoli's thrillers, well over 100 minutes) that is saved by the twists and turns of its plot. Susan Scott is an exotic dancer (ie, stripper) who has a relationship with a very violent boyfriend, played by Simon Andreu. Frank Wolff is an eye surgeon who becomes infatuated with Scott (even though he's married). After spending lavish amounts of money on her for a new wardrobe she begins to take him more seriously. Meanwhile, she is receiving threatening phone calls which culminate in the maniac entering her bedroom and sticking a knife to her throat. The only distinguishing feature of the madman is his piercing blue eyes (he was first seen killing a one-eyed man on a train). The surprise comes half way into the film when Scott is indeed killed (quite anticlimactically, as she is smothered to death with a pillow). There is still a lot of plot left to slug through including diamond thieves and a transvestite.

As you might ascertain from the above, the visual motif of Frank Wolff's profession gives director Ercoli a field day. At one point Wolff is seen filming one of Scott's performances with a movie camera. Blind patients and a set of blue-colored contact lenses also figure into the scenario. Simon Andreu gives a fine performance as the brutal boyfriend who is all too obvious as the red-herring of the cast. Stelvio Cipriani's score is a disappointment. I have to think he was overwhelmed by all that damn dialogue.

GLI OCCHI FREDDI DELLA PAURA
THE COLD EYES OF FEAR

Director: Enzo Castellari (Enio Girolami). Sc: Enzo Castellari, Tito Carpi, Leo Anchiz. Mus: Ennio Morricone. Cast: Frank Wolff, Fernando Rey, Gianni Garko, Karin Schubert, Giovanni Ralli.

Rating: ★★

Comments: Considering the personnel in front and behind the camera, this film is a rank disappointment (only Ennio Morricone comes out with reputation intact). Frank Wolff plays a maniac who is out for revenge against the judge (Fernando Rey) who first sent him to prison. Karin Schubert (who went on to star in porno films) has a great cameo scene that features her two best attributes. Gianni Garko is ineffective as the film's nominal hero. He was much more at home in Westerns where he starred as the Sartana character. The dubbing is really obtrusive as the entire cast are given poorly done British accents. Director Castellari has no feel for the Giallo genre.

Euro ad-mat for Enzo Castellari's Cold Eyes Of Fear

L'OCCHIO NEL LABIRINTO
BLOOD

Director: Mario Caiano. Sc: Mario Caiano, Antonio Saguera. Horst Hachler. Mus: Roberto Nicolosio. Cast: Rosemary Dexter, Adolfo Celi, Sybil Danning, Alida Valli, Horst Frank.

Rating: ★★

Comments: Julie (Rosemary Dexter) has a dream about killing her psychiatrist/lover Luca (Horst Frank). It takes place in a labyrinth. She attempts to locate him and ends up meeting Frank (Adolfo Celi), who claims he'll try and help her, yet what he really wants to do is to get inside her pants. She meets his mistress Greta (Alida Valli) and stays at her beach house (which is also populated by a bunch of worthless young people who know Valli's son). It is revealed that most of these people knew Luca and because he was such a scumbag, all had a reason to kill him (as we learn in flashback). Meanwhile, several attempts are made on Julie's life causing everyone at the house to distrust everyone else. When Julie accidentally kills one of their own they decide it's time to put her out of their misery. She's rescued by Frank who intends to make her his sex slave but unfortunately for him, Julie did indeed kill Luca and now plans to do away with Frank the same way (ie, a long butcher knife). Mario Caiano (whose best film was AMANTI D'OLTRETOMBA [NIGHTMARE CASTLE] with Barbara Steele) is an effective story teller and isn't afraid to revel in the two most saleable commodities of the genre: breasts and blood. The gutting and beheading of Luca is quite graphic for its day. A relatively flat-chested Sybil Danning appears as one of the worthless house guests and is put to good use.

The surprise twist of having Dexter be the killer is nice, but it does seem to cause those who care about political correctness (ie, Phil Hardy) some problems. Roberto Nicolosi's (his scores were always ways replaced by AIP with Les Baxter's work) music is quite atonal and jazzy but effectively relays the characters schizophrenia.

UN POSTO IDEALE PER UCCIDERE

AN IDEAL PLACE TO KILL
aka DIRTY PICTURES

Director: Umberto Lenzi. Sc: Lucia Druidi Demby, Antonio Altoviti, Umberto Lenzi. Mus: Bruno Lauzi. Cast: Irene Papas, Ray Lovelock, Ornella Muti, Michel Bardin, Umberto D'Orsi.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: This has to be one of Umberto Lenzi's most cynical films. If ever a director exposed his true feelings about the youth movement of the late 60s and early 70s, this is the one. This film makes Lucio Fulci look like a student radical. The film begins with star Ray Lovelock "singing" over the opening credits. Ray would go on to warble in Ruggero Deodato's LIVE LIKE A MAN, DIE LIKE A COP five years later to no noticeable improvement in his vocal talents. Anyway, Richard (Ray Lovelock) and Ingrid (Ornella Muti, who looks like Linda Blair with baby fat) are on holiday in Italy. They finance their trip by selling "dirty" pictures of Ingrid. After being caught and given 24 hours to get out of the country, they end up stranded at the home of Barbara (Irene Papas). At first she panics at the sight of them, soon however, she encourages them to stay and make themselves at home. It doesn't take long for Richard to discover that Barbara has killed her husband and intends to make him and Ingrid the guilty suspects.

Much movie's running time is filled in with both sides playing a cat-and-mouse game of who will ultimately be set up for the murder. Finally, Richard and Ingrid escape just as the police arrive (allowing Barbara to shift the blame onto the fleeing couple) only to loose control of the car as it goes around a curve and plummet hundreds of feet below, bursting into an inferno as it reaches the bottom.

Now Umberto, let me get this straight... Because Richard and Ingrid are hippies and believe in feminist principals (Ingrid posing in the nude kinda blows that one), they deserve to barbecue on an abandoned stretch of road? This took some cajones since Lenzi was basically spitting on the very audience these films were intended for.

QUALCOSA STRISCIA NEL BUIO

SOMETHING CREEPING IN THE DARK

Director: Mario Colucci. Sc: Mario Colucci. Mus: Angelo Francisco Lavagnini. Cast: Farley Granger, Lucia Bosé, Giacomo Rossi-Stuart, Stan Cooper, Angelo Francesco Lavagnino, Loredana Nusciak.

Rating: ★☆

Comments: To my knowledge director Mario Colucci hasn't directed many films, and based on this effort it's easy to see why. The cast ends up in an old gothic styled house that may or may not be haunted.

People become possessed and deaths occur but you'll be hard-pressed to care. The cast either overacts shamelessly (Granger and perennial whiner Stan Cooper) or remain comatose (Composer Lavagnini who CANNOT act). Lucia Bosé was much better in Jorge Grau's THE FEMALE BUTCHER.

QUATTRO MOSCHE DI VELLUTO GRIGIO

4 FLIES ON GRAY VELVET

Director: Dario Argento. Sc: Luigi Cozzi, Dario Argento, Mario Foglietti. Mus: Ennio Morricone. Cast: Michael Brandon, Mimsy Farmer, Bud Spencer.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Musician Robert Tobias (Michael Brandon), is being followed by a mysterious stranger whom he accidentally kills. During the altercation he sees someone up above taking photographs. At first he thinks blackmail is the photographer's motive, however he soon realizes that it's much more diabolical. His wife Nina (Mimsy Farmer) leaves him after their maid is killed. As more and more people around him die, Robert discovers from the police that the last image seen by his recently deceased new girlfriend (Argento and his scriptwriters concoct some bullshit mumbo jumbo process to explain and justify the film's title) was 4 flies. Going home he finds Nina has returned and wearing a pendant containing 4 flies. Just as she is about to kill him (he reminded her of the father she grew to hate), Robert's friend God (the aptly titled ex-Italian Olympic champion, Bud Spencer) arrives and saves him. Nina ends up getting decapitated in a car accident.

There isn't much left to say about filmmaker Dario Argento these days (though critics like John Martin amaze me by still doing so in an intelligent manner) as he's now been accepted into the critical mainstream. This film still holds up and is a good indicator that more ambitious work (ie, PROFUNDO ROSSO [DEEP RED]) was just around the corner.

Brandon has been criticized (and rightly so) for his rather bland portrayal, however Mimsy Farmer has NOT received near enough credit for her role. Her screaming, raging psycho-freak-out at the climax is Scream Queening at its finest!

LA TARANTOLA DAL VENTRE NERO

THE BLACK BELLY OF THE TARANTULA

Director: Paolo Cavara. Sc: Lucille Laks. Mus: Ennio Morricone. Cast: Giancarlo Giannini, Claudine Auger, Stefania Sandrelli, Barbara Bouchet, Rossella Falk, Silvano Tranquilli, Annabella Incontrera, Barbara Bach.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: If an English language print of this film ever shows up, I'm sure the rating will go up. A series of murders involving the customers of a chic beauty salon, become the prime concern for Inspector Tellini (Giancarlo Giannini). He solves the case just in time to save his wife from suffering a similar fate.

The title tangentially revolves around both the murderer's modus operandi and the animal kingdom. The victims' bellies are ripped open with a sharp instrument much like a breed of wasp dispatches its deadly nemesis, the tarantula. I knew my degree in Wildlife Science would finally be put to good use eventually! Although she has a brief appearance, Barbara Bouchet's nude massage over the opening credits is a memorable one. Her murder sets the plot in motion as both the husband (Silvano Tranquilli) and Lover meet similar fates. The killer is easy to "see" coming without too much guesswork. Cavaia always makes his mark in whatever genre he tackles. His ability to coax a restrained performance from Giannini is miraculous. Morricone's score blends both noise and romantic type melodies to help the viewer remain on the edge of his seat. Although nothing more than skin and bones here, Sandrelli went on to be a major erotic presence in such films as Tinto Brass' THE KEY and QUELLE STRANE OCCASIONI (directed by Alberto Sordi).

1972 ABUSO DI POTERE
SHADOWS UNSEEN

Director: Camillo Bazzoni. Sc: Fabio Pittorru, Massimo Felisatti. Mus: Riz Ortolani. Cast: Frederick Stafford, Marilu Tolo, Franco Fabrizi, Corrado Gaipa, Claudio Gora, Ninetto Davoli, Raymond Pellegrin, Umberto Orsini.

Rating: ★★

Comments: This film belongs more to the Paranoia thrillers like INVESTIGATION OF A CITIZEN ABOVE SUSPICION (Elio Petri) or CONFESSIONS OF A POLICE CAPTAIN (Damiano Damiani) than the Dario Argento School.

Journalist Enrico Galiardi is killed in the back of a grimy alleyway. Police Inspector Luca Michelia (Fred Stafford), who is often criticized for his strong arm tactics, is assigned the job. Almost at once he is given anonymous tips that allow him to crack the case. He feels he's been setup and so releases the suspect the tips led him to. His Superiors question his motives and want him to wrap up the case immediately. Luca ignores all attempts at being setup and just as he is about to crack the case wide open and reveal all types of upper level corruption, he's massacred in a phone booth. The thriller portion of this film is considered so insignificant, that we never learn what Stafford discovered, why was Galiardi killed? Bazzoni is a competent director and he, along with cinematographer Claudio Ragano have fashioned an environment of shadows that certainly aids the paranoia end of things. Composer Riz Ortolani, contributes a great musical score that belongs in an excellent Giallo. Unfortunately, this isn't it.

AL TROPICO DEL CANCRO
TROPIC OF CANCER

Director: Edward G. Muller (Edoardo Mulargia). Sc:

Antonio De La Loma, Antonio De Tefte (Anthony Steffen), Edoardo Mulargia. Mus: Piero Umiliani.

Cast: Anthony Steffen, Anita Strindberg, Umberto Raho, Gabriele Tinti.

Rating: ★★

Comments: Even setting this film on the island of Haiti can't save the rather dull premise of a doctor who because of an important medical discovery, endangers those around him. This time the killer is after the medical secret for his own selfish end and so kills those who are attempting to bargain for the rights. Script writer Jose de la Loma would go on to become a prolific Euro-trash director of action movies (usually starring Jorge Rivero). Anthony Steffen, on shaky ground here as the doctor, certainly proves he's no screenplay writer either. Only Strindberg and especially Tinti distinguish themselves in this one.

ALLA RICERCA DEL PIACERE
aka REPLICA DI UN DELITTO
AMUCK

Director: Silvio Amadio. Sc: Silvio Amadio. Mus: Teo Uselli. Cast: Barbara Bouchet, Farley Granger, Rosalba Neri, Dino Mele, Umberto Raho.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Greta (Barbara Bouchet, who has never been better) arrives at the secluded home of writer Richard Stewart (Farley Granger) and his wife Eleonor (Rosalba Neri). She has been employed as Richard's new secretary. Their last one, Sally, has mysteriously disappeared. Before too long, Greta learns that she has entered a den of iniquity as Richard and Eleonora participate in all types of perverted sexual games. Greta's real motive for being there is to find out what happened to Sally

(she was Greta's childhood friend). She finds herself being drawn into Richard's evil lair and eventually falls in love. Richard explains that Sally's death was an accident, that Rocco, a brutish simpleminded local fisherman, choked Sally to death when she resisted his advances (sounds more like murder to me). Unfortunately for Greta, Richard was directly involved in the incident and he has decided it's time for Greta to join Sally.

Perversity permeates every frame of this film as Granger and Neri resemble characters culled from a Tennessee Williams novel. Their abode, out in the country and surrounded by swamps adds to the mood. Silvio Amadio, with this film and SMILE BEFORE DEATH, obviously knew how to coax Rosalba Neri into giving definitive, wicked performances. Ample nude scenes with both her and Bouchet, makes this film an ETC lovers delight. The two rape scenes involving Rocco (Dino Mele) are unbearably protracted and hard to watch. Umberto Raho, as the butler is around for red-herring purposes only, and is rewarded with a hook through the neck.

UN BIANCO VESTITO PER MARIALÉ SPIRITS OF DEATH

Director: Romano Scavolini. Sc: Giuseppe Mangione, Remigio Del Grosso. Mus: Fiorenzo Carpi. Cast: Evelyn Stewart, Luigi Pistilli, Ivan Rassimov, Pilar Velasquez, Gianni Dei.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Romano Scavolini is mostly known in this country for directing NIGHTMARES (which used misleading advertising to imply that Tom Savini worked on the effects). Director Scavolini actually got his start in Italy working on Spaghetti westerns and this bizarre thriller.

The film opens in flashback as we see two lovers (Evelyn Stewart & Gianni Dei) frolicking on a blanket out in the woods (and feminists take note, it's Gianni Dei that is nude while Stewart keeps her clothes on!). The husband shows up and kills them both and then turns the gun on himself and blows his brains out. All of this is witnessed by his young daughter, Marialé. Flash forward 20 years to where Marialé (Evelyn Stewart) and her husband Paolo (Luigi Pistilli) are living a rather gloomy life inside an old mansion. Outside, guests arrive, summoned mysteriously by telegram. These include Massimo (Ivan Rassimov), a former lover of Marialé, Mercedes (Pilar Velasquez), Gustavo and Sammy, the latter a pretty black actress who has come along for some cheap thrills, and several others. Instantly, weird shit starts to happen such as power outages, cut telephone lines, and a snake that crawls up Mercedes' leg. None of this seems to really bother anyone as they make plans for a huge dinner. Everyone dresses up in weird costumes (Gustavo dons a ballerina tutu), eats and drinks too much. A storm brews outside as people hallucinate, get chased by scorpions, make love, strip, you name it. By now you're asking, why is he reviewing this movie? Well, finally a servant is killed along with the majority of the guests (some in a rather graphic fashion) to justify its borderline status as a thriller. The killer is of course the mentally ill Marialé and in a circular, ironical ending, she along with her lover Massimo, are shot by Paolo, who in turn, puts the gun up to his head and pulls the trigger. This film very much represents the era it was made in as the clothes and directorial technique resemble a bad acid trip. The cast for this film includes some of the best Italy has to offer, but they are stuck in a bad film. The music by Fiorenzo Carpi is greatly aided by the orchestration of Bruno Nicolai in giving it a Morricone spin.

CHI L'HA VISTA MORIRE?

WHO SAW HER DIE?

Director: Aldo Lado. Sc: Massimo D'Avak, Francesco Barilli, Aldo Lado. Mus: Ennio Morricone. Cast: George Lazenby, Anita Strindberg, Adolfo Celi, Dominique Boschero.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: A child killer is on the prowl in Venice.

Franco's (George Lazenby) daughter Roberta has come to stay with him for the summer. Tragedy strikes as Roberta becomes the killer's second victim. Franco's estranged wife Elizabeth (Anita Strindberg) arrives to comfort Franco as he becomes obsessed with finding his daughter's assassin. I'm sure it's just coincidental, but there are a lot of images here that would turn up later in Nicolas Roeg's DON'T LOOK NOW, due no doubt, to the fact that they both involve the murder of a child and are set in the decaying city of Venice.

George Lazenby, the destined to be known as the unsuccessful James Bond, gives a good performance as the distraught father. Aldo Lado would also make THE SHORT NIGHT OF THE BUTTERFLIES (PARALYZED), here in the USA), NIGHT TRAIN MURDERS [aka NEW HOUSE OF THE LEFT] and THE HUMANOID (I'll try and not hold that against him). Morricone's score uses the chanting of young female voices for most of the score and it's obviously a very effective device here. One of the many thrillers where the killer is revealed to have ties with the Catholic Church.

5 DONNE PER L'ASSASSINO

FIVE WOMEN FOR THE KILLER

Director: Stelvio Massi. Sc: Roberto Gianviti, Gianfranco Clerici, Vincenzo Mannino. Mus: Giorgio Gaslini. Cast: Francis Matthews, Pascal Rivault, Giorgio Albertazzi, Howard Ross, Katia Christine.

Rating: ★

Comments: When you look at the personnel behind the scenes, especially the scriptwriting, the blame for this rancid piece of shit must be laid squarely on the shoulders of Stelvio Massi. The cast is as dull as dishwater, you know you're in trouble when the reliably sleazy Howard Ross, ends up playing a by-the-book cop without any flaws. Giorgio Pisani arrives home to find his pregnant wife dead and his premature child in intensive care. A woman doctor friend shows him a report proving him sterile, thus he realizes that his wife must have fooled around on him to get pregnant (she was desperate to have a child). Soon, associates and friends of Giorgio start turning up with their throats and bellies slashed open with a straight razor. All the clues lead to Giorgio (stiffly played by Francis Matthews), so of course, he's innocent. It was his doctor friend Lydia (Pascal Rivault), who was actually the sterile one and killing those who could have children.

Katia Christine as Giorgio's child's nanny is simply beautiful to look at, too bad she has the charm of cardboard. Massi, like Castellari, shows that horror films are not his cup-of-tea. He would prove that Cops-n-Robbers (with no horrific elements) is where his interest lie. The film also uses the two-killers motive, so endemic to these films as a philandering physician employs the modus operandi of the killer to get rid of a troublesome paramour. There are plentiful nude scenes and gore is abundant (however, the crudely used torsos, the killer's blade cuts up looks like Herschell Lewis was an on-the-set advisor), yet Massi's flaccid setups and execution really drags this mess down.

IL COLTELLO DI GHIACCIO

(no known English Language title)

Director: Umberto Lenzi. Sc: Umberto Lenzi, Antonio Troisio. Mus: Marcello Giombini. Cast: Carroll Baker, Eduardo Fajardo, Alan Scott, Evelyn Stewart, Jorge Rigaud.

Rating: ★★★☆

Comments: What a shame that Lenzi's most accomplished work in this field is not currently available in this country. It is basically his spin on THE SPIRAL STAIRCASE (1946), directed by Robert Siodmak. In a precursor to his animal atrocity cannibal films, the film opens with Jennie (Evelyn Stewart) and Marta (Carroll Baker) attending a rather bloody bullfight. Lenzi instantly helps us to sort out character sympathies as Jennie seems to get off on the violence while Marta is disgusted. Jennie has returned home to visit her father (Jorge Rigaud). True to form for Stewart, she's killed off early on, her throat slashed. It is here that we realize Marta is a mute, because when she discovers the body, her mouth opens to scream, but no sound issues forth. Marta has recurring glimpses of a Manson-like character with oddly colored eyes who may be the murderer. More deaths occur including the family's maid and a young girl (played by the same child actress that appeared in THE BLOOD SPATTERED BRIDE) join the list of victims.

The deaths may be linked to a Devil worshipping cult as police find an amulet and other evidence in a nearby graveyard. Like the aforementioned THE SPIRAL STAIRCASE, Baker ends up alone in her house threatened by a potential murderer. Surprise, it's actually the family chauffeur Marcos (Eduardo Fajardo), who, with the help of Rigaud and the police, staged it all to uncover the fact that she is the killer! She held Jennie responsible for her lost voice (it was psychosomatic as she lets out a scream when threatened by Marcos) and so killed her. The others had to die when they discovered her guilt. A very bold departure this time for the Lenzi/Baker team as you had to figure by now, they too were tired of the formula. Having Baker play the entire film, except for the final minute, as a mute, put the pressure on her to deliver a well-crafted performance, which she does in spades. The revelation at the end really catches you off-guard and the red-herring subplot of the Hippie looking suspect whose only crime is that he is a pathetic druggie helps cement the surprise.

LA MORTE ACCAREZZA A MEZZANOTTE

(no known English Language title)

Director: Luciano Ercoli. Sc: Sergio Corbucci, Ernesto Gastaldi, Manuel Velasco, Roberto Leoni. Mus: Gianni Ferrio. Cast: Susan Scott, Simon Andreu, Peter Martell, Claudie Lange, Carlo Gentili.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: If you want to know about this film, then purchase ETC #5 and read all about it there! The thing I find interesting is that Sergio Corbucci, much better known for Westerns and comedies, had a hand in the script. Like all the other Ercoli thrillers discussed here, it's too damn long and involved but it is stylishly directed and features more than enough triangulations of plot to keep you guessing. Jorge Grau's regular photographer, Fernando Arribas, packs the film with lots of nice visuals and Ercoli doesn't shy from the red stuff. The fact that there are two murderers helps to categorize this one as a thriller 'all Italiana.

LA MORTE NEGLI OCCHI DEL GATTO

7 DEATHS IN A CAT'S EYES

Director: Antonio Margheriti. Sc: Antonio Margheriti, Giovanni Simonelli. Mus: Riz Ortolani. Cast: Jane Birkin, Hiram Keller, Anton Diffring, Venantino Venantini, Serge Gainsbourg.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: In an interview with Margheriti, slated for an upcoming issue of ETC, he stated that this was his favorite contribution to the Giallo cycle. Well, compared to NUDE...SI MUORE it's hard to argue but this film is no great shakes either. The film opens with a man being killed with a straight razor and his body dumped into a basement. As usual with these films, it has definite significance in the scheme of things. Meanwhile Corringa (Jane Birkin, who looks like she rented Mick Jagger's lips) arrives at her Aunt Mary's castle (the film is set in Scotland, thus secondary characters like perennial Antonio (Anthony Dawson) Margheriti favorite, Alan Collins, are dubbed with a Scottish accent). There she meets Mary's supposed insane son James (Hiram Keller), Dr. Franz (Anton Diffring) and Father Robertson (Venantino Venantini). All of these people will fall into the category of suspicious characters once more murders take place. And before you know it people start dropping like flies, such as Alicia (Corringa's mother), Angus (Alan Collins), Franz, and finally Susan (James' "French" teacher who was actually a bi-sexual tart hired by Franz to help drive Mary's son over the edge). Oh yeah, let's not forget James' pet orangutan (also named James who looks more like a chimpanzee) who too bites the banana. When it's all said and done, the murderer is revealed to be Venantini, who isn't a real priest (that was who he killed before the opening credits), but a relative of Corringa, who intended to claim the family inheritance once he'd killed off those first in line. He ends up being shot by the local Inspector (lethargically played by Serge Gainsbourg, Birkin's real life husband). One of the biggest red herrings in this film is the bogus sub-plot involving the family curse centering around a Chimera or vampire. Much on screen dialogue is wasted on this non-occurrence. Riz Ortolani shamelessly recycles musical cues from the earlier Margheriti collaboration, VIRGIN OF NUREMBERG/HORROR CASTLE. Unfortunately, because of the film's title, we must suffer through endless shots of a cat's eyes during the murder sequences. Nothing like a quick cut to a feline's orbs to dissipate the tension.

NON SI SEVIZIA UN PAPERINO
DON'T TORTURE A DUCKLING

Director: Lucio Fulci. Sc: Lucio Fulci, Roberto Gianviti, Gianfranco Clerici. Mus: Riz Ortolani. Cast: Florinda Bolkan, Barbara Bouchet, Tomas Milian, Irene Papas, Marc Porel.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Another film centering on the tragedy of child murder and like Lado's WHO SAW HER DIE?, the guilty party comes from the Church. You gotta love that Catholic guilt. Tomas Milian, in a very subdued part becomes involved in the investigation along with Barbara Bouchet (without a doubt one of the best looking women in the world). Local Gypsy Florinda Bolkan is the prime suspect in the murders and suffers a horrifying death at the hands of the bigoted locals.

If ever Fulci put himself "on the couch" in regard to revealing his phobias, this is the film. From revealing the stupidity of mob action to a distrust of the Church to the fear of Homosexuality, it's all here on display. I doubt you can find a better example in Fulci's filmography of his superlative direction. When you compare this film to his more recent work, you have to wonder if it's the work of the same man.

LA NOTTE CHE EVELYN USCÌ DALLA TOMBA
THE NIGHT EVELYN CAME OUT OF THE GRAVE

Director: Emilio Miraglia. Sc: Fabio Pittorru, Massimo Felisatti, Emilio Miraglia. Mus: Bruno Nicolai. Cast: Anthony Steffen, Erika Blanc (Enrica Bianchi Colombatto), Marina Malfatti, Giacomo Rossi-Stuart, Umberto Raho, Roberto Maldera.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Lord Alan Cunningham (Anthony Steffen) suffers a breakdown after the death of his wife Evelyn. His physician and friend, Richard (Giacomo Rossi-Stuart) recommends he remarry as soon as possible to aid in his recovery (how's that for sound medical advice!). Alan meets Gladys (Marina Malfatti) and it's absolutely love at first sight. They soon marry but Alan begins suffering from hallucinations about his late wife (hence the title of this film). As we near the film's finale, we learn that Gladys along with Alan's cousin George (Roberto Maldera) are in league together to drive him mad (George would take over control of Alan's estate). They almost succeed if it were not for a makeshift lime pit involving a box of Boric Acid and a swimming pool. Alan and Richard had both caught on earlier to what was going on. Here's another film that gets no respect. So of course I like it. Instead of the old plotline of driving the wife insane, LA NOTTE... turns it around toward the husband. The only problem is that he's pretty much over-the-bend already.

Anthony Steffen (real name: Antonio De Teffe) really hams it up, almost to the film's detriment. The other negative is that Erika Blanc's performance is reduced to a cameo. Still, there's plenty of twists and turns to keep ones interest going (oh yeah, there's lots of nudity too) until the end. Rat-faced Umberto Raho never disappoints.

PERCHÉ QUELLE STRANE GOCCE
DI SANGUE SUL CORPO DI JENNIFER?
WHAT ARE THOSE STRANGE DROPS OF BLOOD
DOING ON THE BODY OF JENNIFER?

Director: Anthony Ascott (Giuliano Carmineo). Sc: Ernesto Gastaldi. Mus: Bruno Nicolai. Cast: Edwige Fenech, George Hilton, Paola Quattrini, Annabella Incontrera, Jorge Rigaud, Alan Collins.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: It's a shame that Carmineo only directed one Giallo as he obviously understood how to get the most out of the genre. He's best known for his westerns (such as his excellent SARTANA series featuring Gianni Garko and, later, George Hilton; and IL MOMENTO DA UCCIDERE [THE MOMENT OF DEATH], which also starred George Hilton) which is too bad, as most horror fans turn their nose up at the thought of watching a film in this genre. Carmineo is greatly aided by the talents he had available both in front of and behind the camera. Murders are taking place in a high rise apartment complex and as usual, the police don't have a clue. When a black dancer (her act greatly resembles Darryl Hannah's look in the 1982 film, BLADERUNNER) is drowned in her bathtub Jennifer (Edwige Fenech) and Marilyn (Paola Quattrina) move into the now vacant apartment. Jennifer meets Andrea (the impossibly handsome, George Hilton) and it's love at first sight. However, since this is an Italian thriller, and Hilton is the star, you know he's either going to be the killer or the director will milk his red herring status for all it's worth! The final piece of the puzzle is next door neighbor, Sheena (Annabella Incontrera), a lesbian who lives with her violinist father (Jorge Rigaud). The killings persist and even occur outside the building (Paola is knifed on the street and throws even more suspicion onto Andrea), before the final wrapup scene. It seems that Sheena's father, disgusted with her dykish ways decides to "punish" all the loose women his daughter has or may encounter. Andrea shows up and causes the killer to plummet to his death (an almost obligatory means of dispatching with the villain).

Director Giuliano Carmineo casts his film with interesting faces, allowing Alan Collins a brief cameo, early in the film, as the club owner where the black stripper worked. More important is Carla Mancina as Mrs. Moss, an ugly old crone (who makes Margaret Hamilton from THE WIZARD OF OZ, look like a real babe) who has a deformed son locked up in her apartment which allows the filmmakers to lead viewers in the wrong direction about who the killer might be. The score by Nicolai is pure thematic heaven, rich in strings and melodies. The luscious photography by future director Stelvio Massi allows him to indulge in his tendency to frame a scene at an odd camera angle to help set a mood of unbalanced ambiance.

RAGAZZA TUTTA NUDA ASSASSINATA NEL PARCO NUDE GIRL FOUND KILLED IN PARK

Director: Alfonso Brescia. Sc: Antonio Fos, Peter Skeri, Gianni Martucci. Mus: Carlo Savina. Cast: Robert Hoffmann, Irina Demick, Pilar Velasquez, Howard Ross, Philippe Leroy, Adolfo Celi.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Al Brescia (aka Al Bradley) is my nominee for the worst fucking Italian director. Name me one film he directed that reveals the least bit of talent (while his BEAST IN SPACE is trashy fun, it still proves my above point). A multi-millionaire has been killed at an amusement park. Just a few days earlier he had taken out a million dollar life insurance policy. The insurance company sends in their best agent (Robert Hoffmann) to find a loophole to get them out of paying off the policy. As simple as that plot sounds it gets totally convoluted by the time the film ends. Much like George Hilton, if Hoffmann is the star, you can bet your ass he's the guilty party. Howard Ross as a mute (but still sleazy) stableboy has a sultry love scene with nymphomaniac Pilar Velasquez that is one of the few highlights of this film. Both Adolfo Celi (who was great in WHO SAW HER DIE?) and Philippe Leroy phone in their roles. Screenplay writer Martucci would go on to direct his own thriller in 1974 called THRAUMA.

SETTE ORCHIDEE MACCHiate DI ROSSO SEVEN ORCHIDS STAINED IN RED

Director: Umberto Lenzi. Sc: Umberto Lenzi, Roberto Gianviti. Mus: Riz Ortolani. Cast: Antonio Sabato, Uschi Glass, Pier Paolo Capponi, Rossella Falk, Marina Malfatti, Marisa Mell, Gabriella Giorgelli, Petra Schürmann.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: This film represents the last official adaptation of an Edgar Wallace story from the German studio that started it all in the late fifties, Rialto. Based on Wallace's The Puzzle of the Silver Half Moons (this title comes from the medallion left in the hands of each victim), this film is much more Giallo than Krimi (the German term used for the crime books Wallace wrote). The film revolves around Mario (Antonio Sabato) and Giulia (Uschi Glass, a veteran of many German made EW films) as they are threatened by a black gloved killer. In fact, there have been five deaths before them (including a prostitute (Gabriella Giorgelli), a painter (Marina Malfatti), an insane woman (Rossella Falk), an actress (Marisa Mell) and a teacher (Petra Schürmann) all linked to a dead American.

The killer turns out to be a priest (boy, religion sure takes it on the chin in these films!) out for revenge. The print I saw was in Italian so I'm fuzzy on the killer's motivation, but there are other problems too. The video also has a reel out of order as Marisa Mell is dispatched in an incredibly bloody sequence involving a power drill (did Brian DePalma screen this film before making BODY DOUBLE?), yet turns up later in the film as Mario is seen questioning her about her part in the murders! Ortolani's score is an enjoyable tribute to Morricone and is one of the best things about the film.

IL SORRISO DELLA IENA

SMILE BEFORE DEATH

Director: Silvio Amadio. Sc: Silvio Amadio, Francesco Villa, Francesco Orazio di Dio. Mus: Bob Deramont. Cast: Rosalba Neri, Silvano Tranquilli, Luciana Della Robia.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: One of my favorites that has recently turned up in English under the above title (God Bless the Home Video industry of Finland, and Video Search Of Miami for finding and importing!). This one follows the niche carved out by Lenzi which features an older woman (Rosalba Neri) undermined by a younger couple. The twist here is that because Neri has definite lesbian tendencies, it is a woman (Luciana Della Robia) and not a man who gets the better of her. Robia turns up to claim the estate and inheritance after the death of her mother. This surprises the shit out of Neri (and her sleazebag accomplice Tranquilli) because she murdered her thinking there was no legal heir other than husband Tranquilli. After much degradation, Robia seemingly walks off with the money leaving Neri and company on the hook for several more murders. As she leaves she gets run over by a car carrying the real daughter.

Amadio really is an unknown quantity in this country. He definitely has an eye for bringing sordid subjects to the screen (also see REPLICA DI UN DELITTO). Voice specialist Edda Della Orso sings a wonderful little ditty throughout.

SETTE SCIALLI DI SETA GIALLA

CRIMES OF THE BLACK CAT

Director: Sergio Pastore. Sc: Sergio Pastore, Sandro Continenza, Gianni Simonelli. Mus: Manuel De Sica. Cast: Anthony Steffen, Sylva Koscina, Giacomo Rossi-Stuart, Jeanette Len.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Models are once again the target victims of a mad killer. The use of a black cat's claws as a conveyance for the poison used to knock off the women is an original twist. Anthony Steffen is a blind composer who gets involved because the first victim was his lover. The killer is revealed as a badly scarred former model out to revenge herself for the loss of her beauty.

One of the problems I have with this film is lead Anthony Steffen. Maybe I've seen him in too many Westerns (APOCALYPSE JOE, DJANGO THE BASTARD, etc) but he can't seem to convince in a contemporary role. He seems stiff and is clearly unable to express the simplest emotion (in his Westerns, he just had to walk around with a blank expression on his face).

Jeanette Len (the lady with the cat) is Umberto Lenzi's wife. The film's main claim to fame is the very graphic PSYCHO-like shower murder sequence.

Euro print ad for Sergio Martino's Day Of The Maniac

Comments: You have to give director Sergio Martino credit on this one. Obviously tiring of the Giallo conventions, he mixes in Devil worship and elements of ROSEMARY'S BABY. Writer Santiago Moncada also worked on Mario Bava's HATCHET FOR A HONEYMOON and seems to have a thing about screwed up relationships.

Jane (Fenech) has a reoccurring nightmare of her mother being murdered by a man with a long stiletto blade. It is affecting her relationship with Richard (George Hilton) to the point where she decides to see a psychiatrist that her sister Barbara (Susan Scott) works for. Dr. Burton (Jorge Rigaud) deduces she is reliving a drama from her childhood and recommends complete rest (don't they always?). Jane meets her new neighbor Mary (Marina Malfatti) who, upon hearing of Jane's visions, decides she needs to join a coven of Devil worshippers to help her with her problems (of all the outrageous bullshit!). It seems Mary had the same predicament and it cured her. Jane accompanies Mary to a Black Mass where she learns that Julian Ugarte (from Paul Naschy's WEREWOLF VS. THE VAMPIRE WOMEN) is their leader. She also discovers that her mother was a cult member and her killer (played by Ivan Rassimov in all his glory) is still an active member. During the ceremony, she drinks dog blood and rushes home to make love to Richard. Her second visit to Ugarte's coven results in her stabbing Mary (it's the only way to be free of the cult) and being threatened by Rassimov (whose voice is dubbed by Edmund Purdom) to keep her mouth shut. As everyone around her are being knocked off (including her sister, who committed suicide as she too was part of the coven) the film ends with Ugarte and Hilton struggling atop the apartment building. True to Giallo form, Ugarte falls to his death. Martino really embellishes the film's atmosphere during the Black Mass rituals. He has the coven members looking like zombies as Nicolai goes wild with the musical score (it's one of his best). By this time even Martino realized that Hilton was the perfect red herring suspect as he has his character acting suspicious throughout. Scott is wasted (though she has a brief nude scene, so all is not lost) in a role that requires her to only act as a cold bitch. Good use of London exteriors too.

IL TUO VIZIO È UNA STANZA CHIUSA E SOLO IO NE HO LA CHIAVE

GENTLY BEFORE SHE DIES aka EXCITE ME

Director: Sergio Martino. Sc: Luciano Martino, Sauro Scavolini, Adriano Bolzoni. Mus: Bruno Nicolai. Cast: Edwige Fenech, Luigi Pistilli, Anita Strindberg, Ivan Rassimov, Daniela Giordano.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: One of the best thrillers ever made. Period. This, in my humble opinion is Sergio Martino's masterwork. Luigi Pistilli is a true son-of-a-bitch who takes every opportunity to abuse (both verbally and physically) his poor wife Irene (Anita Strindberg). Into this coupling from Hell enters cousin Floriana (Edwige Fenech), a bi-sexual trollop who beds anyone who can further her own goals. Murders are taking place all around as suspicion seems to center on Pistilli. After he is finally killed by Strindberg, the murders continue. Before the film is over, Martino and his script writers are able to effortlessly work Edgar Allan Poe's THE BLACK CAT into the plot along with the Giallo staple of having two different killers plying their trade. Fenech in a short, cropped hairdo has never been sexier but even more impressive, both in the nude scenes and thesping department is Anita Strindberg. Usually playing second-fiddle or a total goody-two-shoes, here she gets to pull out all the stops as she goes from an abused meek little mousey individual to a full-blown cold-hearted murderess.

Ivan Rassimov has a minor but effective cameo as Strindberg's mostly off camera accomplice. The scariest thing about his character is the wig he was saddled with. Lastly, Bruno Nicolai's score here is among his richest yet in tone and variety. No one screws off in this one.

IL VIZIO HA LE CALZE NERE VICE WEARS BLACK HOSE

Director: Tano Cimarosa. Sc: Luigi De Marchi. Mus: Carlo Savina. Cast: John Richardson, Dagmar Lassander, Ninetto Davoli, Magda Konopka, Giacomo Rossi-Stuart, Daniela Giordano.

Rating: ★★

Comments: Pure exploitation with out a whiff of talent describes this piss-poor effort. Director/actor Tano Cimarosa (he fails at both jobs) somehow managed to coax some fine actors to appear in this subpar effort. Daniela Giordano (in a senseless, wordless cameo) opens the door and is bloodily dispatched by a gloved killer. John Richardson is the cop on the case and he, along with his buffoonish assistant (yes, director Tano Cimarosa) spend the entire film interrogating witnesses. Meanwhile the killer continues to murder female friends of Leonora (Dagmar Lassander) who, though married to Giacomo Rossi-Stuart) prefers the company of women. The primary red herring here is Leonora's idiot son who enjoys brandishing a straight razor and threatening her lovers. The film's ending literally goes to the dogs as the murderer is captured and munched on by a pack of canines. Surprise, it was Stuart, who was getting revenge for his wife's sappho-like tendencies. The film never stints in the nudity department, as the scriptwriters saw to it that Lassander's character was employed as a photographer of nude women.

Early on there's a lovemaking sequence that truly borders on the hardcore, but there's no indication that anyone, especially director Cimarosa were doing anything but going through the motions.

1973 GLI ASSASSINI SONO NOSTRI OSPITI THE KILLERS ARE OUR GUESTS

Director: Vincenzo Rigo. Sc: Renato Romano, Bruno Fontana. Mus: Roberto Rizzo. Cast: Anthony Steffen, Margaret Lee, Luigi Pistilli, Gianni Dei, Livia Cerini.

Rating: ★★

Comments: A really nice cast is wasted in this crime film that is all but devoid of thriller elements. The only reason for including it is the twist at the end, that was a staple in this field. Margaret Lee and two other jewel thieves escape from a botched robbery and take refuge at doctor Guido's (Anthony Steffen in his typical somnubalistic contemporary performance) house in the country. Franco (Gianni Dei of PATRICK STILL LIVES fame) has been wounded and needs care. Guido's wife Mara (Livia Cerini in an over-the-top performance that will have you on the floor!) within minutes of being captured starts bad-mouthing poor Guido and casting aspersions on his manhood. Meanwhile, harried (is there any other type?) police commissioner De Stefano (Luigi Pistilli) is assigned the case and true-to-form gets grief from the higher ups to solve the case ASAP. After an hour or so of watching poor Mara get literally screwed over by most all the cast members (including Margaret Lee!), we find out that Oriana (the Lee character) and Steffen were in cahoots the entire time and they intend to run off to Argentina with the loot.

First they have to kill off the remaining gang members and Steffen takes special pride in plugging poor Mara (Lord knows, everyone else did!). Unfortunately for them, Pistilli is a genius at adding two plus two and greets them at the airport. The main highlight of this film is the dialogue spouted by different characters about Mara. Such doozies as, "You with the ass, get some glasses. I promise to give you a quickie before I kill you," or how about this piece of advice given to Guido about his wife's anti-social behavior, "You didn't screw her enough." I'm afraid this type of philosophy is no longer applicable in the nineties. Or is it?

L'ASSASSINO...È AL TELEFONO SCENES FROM A MURDER

Director: Alberto De Martino. Sc: Vincenzo Mannino, Adriano Bolzoni, Renato Izzo, Alberto De Martino.
Mus: Stelvio Cipriani. Cast: Telly Savalas, Anne Heywood, Giorgio Piazza, Rossella Falk.

Rating: ★★

Comments: Eleanor (Anne Heywood), a famous actress is currently under great stress as she tries to recover from the death of her lover Peter. She sights Ranko (Savalas) who she knows killed Peter and faints dead away. After awakening she finds all the details of her life in disarray. The balance is spent with her trying to convince everyone of Ranko's guilt. It all ends in an abandoned theater where she outwits and kills Ranko. Too late she discovers her sister Margaret (Rossella Falk) was in love with Peter and when he spurned her, she had him killed. Her plan revealed, Margaret commits suicide.

Alberto De Martino can usually be counted on to deliver the exploitable goods, however here, he is saddled with a very emaciated lead actress who, though willing to do the required nude scenes, really has no business trying to pass herself off as young and sexy. An uncharacteristically poor performance by Telly Savalas as a comatose-like hit man is also bad news. Far better are De Martino's FORMULA FOR A MURDER and THE MAN WITH THE ICY EYES (which has sexy Barbara Bouchet).

I CORPI PRESENTANO TRACCE DI VIOLENZA CARNALE TORSO

Director: Sergio Martino. Sc: Ernesto Gastaldi, Sergio Martino. Mus: Guido & Maurizio De Angelis.
Cast: Suzy Kendall, Tina Aumont, Luc Merenda, John Richardson.

Rating: ★★★☆

Comments: I may be full of shit, but this is the film that signals the end of the Italian Giallo film as most people knew it. The gore on display here is without a doubt the most gruesome ever seen up to this time. When we start seeing the killer saw off the limbs of his victims, you know there's no going back to the stylish good ol' days. The final 30 minutes of this film, with the killer stalking Suzy Kendall is a definite precursor to the slasher films of the eighties. Most of today's fans upon seeing this film would think Sergio Martino ripped off Sean Cunningham when he made this one. Like most Americans, I first saw this on the lower half of a double-bill with THE TEXAS CHAINSAW MASSACRE. While the former went on to fame and fortune, poor TORSO still gets no respect. The ironical thing is that "Society" would have you believe that TCM was the goriest of the two, NOT!

For me at the time, TORSO featured some nasty hacksaw grue and oodles of wunnerful undraped female flesh. In a nod to (or a direct ripoff from) Dario Argento's THE BIRD WITH THE CRYSTAL PLUMAGE, Tina Aumont can't quite remember a crucial detail that would identify the murderer (who was wearing the red and black scarf?) in time to save her friends. Ernesto Gastaldi, who would sometimes go by the name Julian Berry, scripted all of Martino's thriller scripts along with some of the better ones not directed by Martino (Carminio's

WHAT ARE THOSE STRANGE DROPS OF BLOOD ON THE BODY OF JENNIFER?). He also directed LIBIDO (see review) and a variant on STRAW DOGS (before Peckinpah) called LONELY, VIOLENT BEACH. If the scriptwriter is the true genius behind a film, then Gastaldi is the Einstein of the Giallo Genre. Joseph Brenner edited 4 minutes from the original Italian version and hired Edmund Purdom to dub Luc Merenda's voice (how's that for useless information?!).

LA DAMA ROSA UCCIDE SETTE VOLTE
THE RED QUEEN KILLS 7 TIMES

Director: Emilio Miraglia. Sc: Fabio Pittorru, Emilio Miraglia. Mus: Bruno Nicolai. Cast: Barbara Bouchet, Ugo Pagliani, Marina Malfatti, Sybil Danning, Maria Pia Giancaro, Marino Masé.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: The title of the film comes from a legend that states two sisters will be involved in a murder. As children, Kitty and Evelyn are playing and true to the legend, Evelyn is accidentally killed. Kitty goes on to become a successful model who finds most of her acquaintances being killed off by a maniacal killer. Is it her lover Martin or did her sister survive that accident years ago and is now seeking revenge? Just what the Fuck do you think? Barbara Bouchet as Kitty, gives her usual strong performance. For all the shit the horror genre gets for being women haters, some bullshit artist posing as a professor at a University should delve into these films and document just how often a woman turns the tables on the usually male killer and emerges as the heroine instead of the victim (ignoring of course the fact that women were being slaughtered for the first 85 minutes). Whereas Miraglia's THE NIGHT EVELYN... was brought down by Anthony Steffen's silly portrayal of a man suffering from a mental illness, THE RED QUEEN KILLS 7 TIMES has no such defects. In fact both Bouchet and Malfatti give real feeling to their roles of the ultimate in sibling rivalry. Look for a very young Sybil Danning in a cheese-cake role as a prostitute.

PASSI DI DANZA SU UNA LAMA DI RASOIO
DEATH CARRIES A CANE aka THE TORMENTER

Director: Maurizio Pradeaux. Sc: Arpad De Riso, Maurizio Pradeaux, Alfonso Balcazar, George Martin. Mus: Roberto Pregadio. Cast: Susan Scott, Robert

Hoffmann, Anuska Borova, Simon Andreu, George Martin.

Rating: ★

Comments: I have a high tolerance for trash, but a film like this, tests even my low standards to their very core. DEATH CARRIES A CANE is so bland, so cliché-ridden, so Fucking awful yet so entertaining that it ends up getting an average rating in spite of all that. Kitty (Susan Scott) is waiting for her fiancé Alberto (Robert Hoffmann of SPASMO) at a tourist observatory when she sees (through a coin-operated telescope) a young woman being brutally knifed to death. The killer is wearing the standard attire (black gloves, black overcoat and hat) and so can't be identified. Even after telling her story to the police inspector (George Martin, in a plastered-down, jet-black toupee that makes him look like a lounge singer from Hell), no one seems to believe her. We are introduced to the rest of the cast, and a more likely group of suspects and red herrings I've yet to witness. There is Alberto, who knew the first victim and is often caught knifing faceless clothing store dummies (he's a performance artist and this is part of his act, yeah sure.)...

Marco (Simon Andreu of NIGHT OF THE SORCERERS), who is a composer and worked with soon to be victim #2 for a future concert appearance, Sylvia (Anuska Berova) and her twin sister Lydia (also played by Berova), the latter hates ballet music which just happens to be the profession of the victims. Sylvia's creepy looking boyfriend (Serafino Profumo, he played the hunchback in Joe D'Amato's DEATH SMILES ON A MURDERER) is even shown staring at a store window display of straight razors (the killer's weapon of choice). Finally, the killer walks with a limp and uses a cane (hence the film's title) and we indeed see Alberto and Sylvia using one early in the film. As you would expect, the cane has no bearing on who the killer is. With all those characters to play with, the film easily fills its 89 minute running time spreading around the suspicion. It comes to a climax when the killer is shot down while he (yes folks, it was Marco) is about to finish off Kitty in a greenhouse. Amazingly enough, though Marco's wife attempts to explain why he did it, the words came out in such a non-sequitur fashion that you're left with no idea why he was knocking off ballerinas in the first place (either that or I'm as dumb as a box of rocks). No one, either in front of nor behind the camera, distinguishes themselves in any form. Even Roberto Pregadio's patented thriller score seems to have no effect on the film when it is heard.

George Martin had a hand (or was it really his middle finger?) in the script and one wonders if he was responsible for the dialogue his character spouts such as the time he asks a fellow co-worker to, "Get me the files of all the deviants and sex offenders with leg disabilities." I don't know about you, but those bastards are really organized! Finally, I can't even recommend the film's copious amount of female nudity because (except for Susan Scott), the actresses who appear here need breast implants to distinguish them from the male cast members. Boredom is a crime no film should inflict on its audience; DEATH CARRIES A CANE should be banished to the same Hell that many of Jesus Franco's films belong in.

RIVELAZIONI DI UN MANIACO SESSUALE
AL CAPO DELLA SQUADRA MOBILE
SO SWEET, SO DEAD

aka THE SLASHER IS A SEX MANIAC

Director: Roberto Montero. Sc: Luigi Angelo, Italo Fasani.

Mus: Giorgio Gaslini. Cast: Farley Granger, Sylva Koscina, Silvano Tranquilli, Annabella Incontrera, Femi Benussi, Chris Avram, Krista Nell, Susan Scott.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: You'll want to take a bath after wallowing in this film for 90 minutes. Roberto Montero was never one of your more subtle directors and here, he really cuts loose in the gore and nudity department.

Rich society wives are having their throats slit by a maniac dressed in the standard black gloves, mask, hat and overcoat. The women targeted were all having extra-marital affairs and in fact the killer leaves pictures of them with their lovers (the male face scratched out) at each scene. Into this mess comes Inspector Capuana (Farley Granger).

Pressure is being put on him by the press and the higher ups to solve the case immediately. He does so (the killer turns out to be The Professor, played by Chris Avram, the autopsy doctor) but not before allowing the maniac to kill Capuana's wife whom he discovers is having an affair with a younger man.

A really sick film whose female cast list reads like a who's who of victims. They are trotted on screen, in guest star status, promptly perform their nude scene, get sliced open, end of role. Susan Scott and Silvano Tranquilli are featured in an explicit love scene that burns up the screen. Giorgio Gaslini's score borders on minimalism, utilizing a saxophone and a woman's voice to add a little class to the sordid going on.

Hardcore sex scenes with Kim Pope, Harry Reems and Tina Russell were added to a U.S. release (for the Adult theatre circuit) under the title PENETRATION in 1976.

TERZA IPOTESI SU UN CASO
DI PERFETTA STRATEGIA CRIMINALE WHO KILLED THE PROSECUTOR AND WHY?

Director: Joseph Warren (Giuseppe Vari). Sc: Thomas Lang. Mus: Mario Bertolazzi. Cast: Lou Castel, Beba Loncar, Adolfo Celi, Massimo Serato, Umberto D'Orsini, Carla Mancina.

Rating: ★☆

Comments: This is what I call a Mafia Giallo. By stating such, believe me, this is no compliment. The film takes the worst elements of both genres, and mixes them into a mish-mash of stupidity. A local prosecuting attorney is killed and the murderous act is witnessed and even more importantly, photographed by Carlo (Lou Castel) and his girlfriend, Olga (Beba Loncar, a minor flavor-of-the-month actress).

They take the photos to Marco Cecarelli (Massimo Serrato), alias Ivan Smirnov, alias Uncle "Fifi". Marco is confined to a wheelchair and makes his living filming nude models for magazines. He advises them to contact local Mafia Capo Don Salvatore (one of his minions was arrested as a suspect) to see if he would pay for the pix.

When they are snubbed by the Godfather they decide to go to the local tabloid for a quick sale. From here on, everyone Castel comes in contact with, including "Fifi" and Olga are killed by a mysterious assassin, out to get the negatives. In a positively comatose finale, we learn that the killer was a newspaper editor who was involved in a drug ring that the prosecuting attorney had uncovered.

The obvious failing of this film, besides Vari's utter lack of talent, is the uneven mixture of genres. Just when you think it's about to become a full-fledged thriller, the Mafia subplot intrudes, and vice versa. Giuseppe Vari has proven himself, with this and many other films of his I've seen, to be the Andy Warhol of the Italian film industry. He takes the simplest action, and drags it out ad infinitum. For example, do we really need to see a man, getting in his car, roll down his window, look around to see if there is any oncoming traffic, put the car into reverse and slowly back his car down the FUCKING driveway. I think not. Vari at times seems obsessed with minutia. If he ever starts filming endless parades of walking feet, WATCH OUT DORIS WISHMAN!! Oh yeah, the score belongs in a Ron Ormond opus.

L'UOMO PIÙ VELENOSO DEL COBRA HUMAN COBRA

Director: Albert J. Walker (Bitto Albertini). Sc: Edoardo Brochero, Ernesto Gastaldi, Luciano Martino.

Mus: Stelvio Cipriani. Cast: Giorgio Ardisson, Erika Blanc, Alberto De Mendoza, Janine Reynaud, Alan Collins.

Rating: ★☆

Comments: This film, much like AL TROPICO DEL CANCRO [TROPIC OF CANCER], proves that the Giallo works best in an urban location. L'UOMO PIÙ VELENOSO DEL COBRA [THE MAN MORE VENOMOUS THAN THE COBRA] is set, for the most part in Kenya and uses a safari as the linchpin for most of the plot details to be worked out in. The jungle does not create a suspenseful enough environment to aid this tale of revenge. Tony's (Giorgio Ardisson) brother Johnny, has been killed and his widow Leslie (Erika Blanc) enlists Tony's aid in discovering who the murderer is. The main suspect is George (Alberto De Mendoza), Johnny's business partner. During a climatic elephant hunt, George is killed and we learn that it was Leslie who was the murderer. She also was responsible for the attempts made on Tony's life as well. Before she is brought to justice she commits suicide. Oh well.

It's disappointing enough to see the people involved in writing the screenplay. Erika Blanc gives a performance that rhymes with her last name. She's not given enough to do as she is placed in the background far too much. Giorgio Ardisson has always wavered from comatose to ham and this film finds him on the near-death side of the fence. Even Cipriani's score is listless (not helped by the film's location).

1974 L'ASSASSINO HA RISERVATO NOVE POLTRONE
THE KILLER RESERVED NINE SEATS

Director: Giuseppe Bennati. Sc: Mario Chiari. Mus: Carlo Savina. Cast: Rosanna Schiaffino, Chris Avram, Eva Czemerys, Lucretia Love, Paola Senatore, Janet Agren, Howard Ross.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: I'm about to make a very sexist remark (Big Surprise!) but were it not for the fact that all of the actresses (except for Schiaffino) get naked in this one, it would barely rate 2 stars. This overlong (103 minutes) and talky thriller centers its action in an abandoned theater (looking very much like the one in OPERA). Patrick (Chris Avram) gathers the players for his new stage production to rehearse their parts. It isn't long before strange things begin to occur. The usual spooky goings-on start happening first, such as the lights shutting off and a beam falling from the ceiling. Then things take a turn for the worse when Kim (Janet Agren) is killed on stage right before everyone's eyes. Even though a murder has taken place, all the characters take every opportunity to grab some up-n-down action. They act like this is a FRIDAY THE 13TH film where the only thing people listen to are their hormones.

As more and more characters get knocked off (including lesbian lovers Eva Czemerys and Lucretia Love), the scriptwriters introduce a supernatural element involving a ghostly caretaker. Talk about covering all the angles! The film ends with Avram being revealed as the crazed one, however the Paola Senatore (who went on to become both a drug addict and a hardcore porno starlet) character and her paramour were also adding to the body count for their own perverted reasons. They are done in by the ghost character.

Schiaffino (who looks like a young Angelica Huston) escapes to freedom. Not much of exception here as its strictly a by-the-numbers Giallo. The supernatural subplot is a complete failure as it is never more than a quick way to wrap the film up. A bore.

GATTI ROSSI UN LABIRINTO DI VETRO
EYEBALL aka THE SECRET KILLER

Director: Umberto Lenzi. Sc: Felix Tusell. Mus: Bruno Nicolai. Cast: Martine Brochard, John Richardson, Inez Pellegrini, Mirta Miller, Silvia Solar, Marta May, Jorge Rigaud.

Rating: ★☆☆

Comments: Without a doubt, this film is the worst thriller produced by the prolific Lenzi. Whoever Felix Tusell is, he has to take the lion's share of credit for producing this execrable mess. It's a combination thriller/tour guide to Barcelona with the latter gaining more exposure than the former. This is NOT the way to make an exciting film. Alma Burton (Marta May) is on her way to NY for medical care when she decides to detour to Barcelona. Her husband, Mark (John Richardson), is there to meet with his secretary Paulette (Martine Brochard) to consummate their love affair. She is on a tour with a diverse group of people such as Reverend Bronson (Jorge Rigaud, Jesus, I never knew this old fart was in so many of these films until now!) and Lisa (Mirta Miller, who starred in a shit load of Paul Naschy films), a lesbian photographer.

Within minutes, people on the tour are knifed and their left eye removed. Mark's wife Alma, appears to be running around in the background and through an entire set of ludicrous circumstances (such as the fact that there was a similar series of murders back home in Vermont and Mark found her lying on the ground, passed out with a bloody knife and an eyeball by her side!) she appears to be the killer. But hey, we know better, don't we? Well, as the victims run out, we discover that the killer is Paulette, whose motive for the murders is based on the fact that as a child, she had her eye ripped out by a friend while they were playing doctor! I don't fucking believe it!! An absolute embarrassment for one in all, even Bruno Nicolai scores indifferently. This is the type of film where everyone acts suspiciously just so they can be considered a suspect. You know you're in trouble in this one when, during a flashback, Richardson's character is seen driving a Pontiac and he states, 'I was driving a Pontiac.' NO shit Sherlock. Hopeless, but dumb fun. For all you fans of Edmund Purdom's dubbing ability, listen to the doctor presiding over the first autopsy scene (that actor, by the way, played a police Inspector in DAY OF THE MANIAC).

MACCHIE SOLARI

AUTOPSY aka THE VICTIM

Director: Armando Crispino. Sc: Armando Crispino, Lucio Battistrada. Mus: Ennio Morricone. Cast: Mimsy Farmer, Ray Lovelock, Barry Primus, Massimo Serrato, Angela Goodwin.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Compared to Crispino's tame (and lame) THE ETRUSCAN KILLS AGAIN, this film (to use a cliché) delivers the foodstuffs. A sick film that doesn't flinch when it comes to rolling around in the feces. All over Rome, people are committing suicide. As we'll see, this film could care less about that, as, other than a mention near the end about the evil sun of summer, the suicides are never explained.

The real plot of the film centers around Dr. Simona (Mimsy Farmer) and her work as an autopsy physician. She is working on a method of study that will be able to determine whether a suicide was faked or not. When a neighbor of hers (who was also involved with her father, played by Massimo Serrato) is found dead on a local beach, a victim of suicide, Simona, along with her boyfriend Ed (Ray Lovelock), discover she was actually murdered. The victim's brother, Father Lennox (Barry Primus), is a creepy individual whom was a former race car driver. When his car spun out of control and killed a dozen people, he went temporarily crazy, only to become a priest after a stay at an insane asylum (sounds good to me). So, he becomes suspect #1 as more and more people, including Serrato are done away with. In a denouement, much too complicated to go into here, we discover that the killer is Ed. He was after an old bible that contained his father's will which would have disinherited him. All the dead either knew where it was or what it contained causing Ed to do away with them. In the now typical ending for these types of films, Ed and Father Lennox struggle atop a tall building, only to have Ed (or Ed's dummy, jeez, I would have love to of had the dummy concession in Italy during the seventies) plummet to the ground below. Farmer's performance can be likened to the sound made when dragging your fingernails across a blackboard. She's in a constant state of jitteriness and suffers from a bad case of frigidity (Ed refers to her as his "little ice cube,"). Ennio Morricone's score picks up on this as his constant use of a woman's voice to simulate an orgasm reinforces her state of mind. That said, when Mimsy does decide to do the nasty, she (and Crispino) cuts loose as the sex scenes are quite graphic.

The gore is, as you might expect with a film centering around the exhumation of dead bodies, also no holds barred. In a perfect bit of type casting, my old favorite, Ernesto Colli (see the review of DEADLY INHERITANCE), plays Evo, the necrophilic morgue worker to perfection.

Finally, most reference books list the running time of this film as 120 minutes which I dispute. Although the version out here as AUTOPSY is cut at 83 minutes, the Euro-versions from France and Italy clock in at 100 and in my opinion are the full length ones.

LA POLIZIA CHIEDE AIUTO

WHAT HAVE THEY DONE TO YOUR DAUGHTERS?

Director: Massimo Dallamano. Sc: Ettore Sanzo, Massimo Dallamano. Mus: Stelvio Cipriani. Cast: Giovanni Ralli, Claudio Cassinelli, Mario Adorf, Farley Granger, Franco Fabrizi.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Back in 1971, director Dallamano made WHAT HAVE THEY DONE TO SOLANGE? It was set at a girl's school and featured a psychotic killer wiping out the enrollment class. It was quite successful and no doubt was responsible for Dallamano returning to this locale. However, this time around, it's more of a police procedural, and we all know how boring they are. A young co-ed is found hanged in an attic. There is evidence she was actually murdered somewhere else and brought to this location to make it look like a suicide. Crusading detective Silvestri (the late Claudio Cassinelli) takes over and proceeds to head full tilt into discovering the truth. He is helped by a lady DA (Ralli) and discovers the sordid truth. It involves child prostitution and corruption in the upper echelons of the police department (Yawn, what else is new?) and before it's all over, plenty of grue has come our way. Dallamano doesn't flinch in the gore department as we see a corpse cut up like a side of beef, a hand amputation right out of The Argento School of Shock Setups, and a head rolling out of a plastic bag, but it's all so staged.

Cinematographer Delli Colli apparently goes out of his way to provide extremely drab lighting, which downplay any atmosphere Dallamano may have had in mind. Dallamano himself, like Aristide Massaccesi (D'Amato) before him, is another cinematographer-turned-director who appears to have lost all sense of atmospheric composition. This film does feature one of Stelvio Cipriani's best scores, with the music enhancing the action each time it bursts forth. Farley Granger has a bit part but seems to be biding his time until he can get his head blown off in THE PROWLER some seven years later.

Director: Umberto Lenzi. Sc: Massimo Franciosa, Luisa Montagnana, Pino Boller, Umberto Lenzi. Mus: Ennio Morricone. Cast: Robert Hoffmann, Suzy Kendall, Ivan Rassimov, Maria Pia Conte.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Until you can see an English language print of this film, I recommend you not bother. It's so convoluted and talky, that until you're able to follow all the twists and turns of the plot, you can't begin to appreciate all that Lenzi and his fellow screenwriters were trying to accomplish. For the first hour of this 90 minute sleeper, you will be as in the dark as the main character, Christian (Robert Hoffmann). In short order he meets and almost beds Barbara (Suzy Kendall), but is interrupted by an assassin (who looks like Dario Argento, only with better hair!). Christian "kills" him and they escape to a deserted chateau where they meet an odd couple Malcolm and Clarinda (the oddly attractive Maria Pia Conte).

Before you know it, Christian admits to the killing and flees. At the same time, women are being murdered (offscreen) and near their bodies is found a plastic dummy, hanging from a tree with a knife in its belly. We finally learn that Christian and his brother Fritz (Ivan Rassimov, dubbed with a fey voice) inherited a huge business from their deceased Father (he was mentally deranged and committed suicide). It seems that Fritz has been trying to drive his brother insane to get him the medical help he needs (a rather extreme method of "help" in my opinion). Unfortunately, he succeeds resulting in the death of Barbara and many others. Christian is killed by Barbara's lover as we discover that Fritz too, has begun to show tendencies of stabbing mannequins with a long knife. For the American release of this film, George Romero filmed approximately 10 minutes of explicit violence to help spice up the film. The print I saw was obviously the original export version. Because we don't know who the murderer might be, none of the killings are shown when they occur (which runs counter to ALL other Giallos where you witness the murder sequence either as a participant or as a victim). While certainly original, I can see how that would pose a problem for the film's producer.

There's no nudity to speak of either so Lenzi really left exploitation fans in the lurch. However, I find this all distinctly refreshing and would use this film to prove to fans disgusted by Lenzi's cannibal films, that the man really does know how to make an entertaining film that relies on plot and atmosphere alone. Morricone's score is among his best (comparable to the one he penned for WHAT HAVE THEY DONE TO SOLANGE?). What a shame only a few cuts have been released on disc.

1975 NUDE PER L'ASSASSINO

STRIP NUDE FOR YOUR KILLER

Director: Andrea Bianchi. Sc: Massimo Felisatti. Mus: Berto Pisano. Cast: Edwige Fenech, Femi Benussi, Nino Castelnuovo, Erna Schurer.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: The pre-credit sequence of a woman dying while having an abortion performed, is all the motivation needed by one of the characters to start killing off members of the cast. The action is centered around the Albatross photography studio. We are introduced to Carlo (Nino Castelnuovo) at a health club where he is seen coaxing one of the patrons (Femi Benussi) into stripping for him. She does gladly (even going so far as doing the nasty in the steam room) since he promises her a job at the studio where he works as a photographer.

Here we are introduced to the employees/victims/red herrings along with someone who'll eventually be the killer. Carlo has the hots for Magda (Edwige Fenech, in short hair) and who can blame him? They eventually get down to the business of screwing as characters all around them are being knocked off.

Eventually Carlo and Magda are left to do battle with the assassin. We learn that one of the models, Patrizia, has been getting revenge on those at the studio she feels were responsible for her friend's death that took place during the opening credits. It's significant (I think) that during this year (1975), two films featured a woman as the killer. Most likely, arty farty types will tell you that this was the result of an underlying feminist response to the genre's staples of abusing women. Me, I think the scriptwriters were just desperate for a new angle. Andrea Bianchi is nothing more than a hack director, but as we can see here, sometimes the subject matter requires nothing more. He's greatly aided here by the crystal clear night photography of Cristiano Gabor. Berto Pisano's score sounds like a blaxploitation wannabee. The opening theme you'll swear belongs in a Richard Roundtree filmography. Erna Schurer is one of the models and has the unfortunate job of appearing in one of the most degrading sex scenes ever (imagine being asked to let a 400 lb slob in a jockey-short diaper paw your breasts). Erna is in desperate need of an eyebrow transplant. I wonder if actor Castelnuovo knew that his balls would make an on screen appearance due to Bianchi's inept camera staging?

The ending is the height of bad taste; after all Carlo and Magda have been through, Carlo decides to try and butt fuck her. The frame freezes over Magda's protests. This is funny?

PROFUNDO ROSSO

DEEP RED

Director: Dario Argento. Sc: Dario Argento, Bernardino Zapponi. Mus: Giorgio Gaslini and The Goblins. Cast: David Hemmings, Daria Nicolodi, Gabriele Lavia, Macha Meril, Clara Calamai.

Rating: ★★★☆

Comments: Is there anybody left who doesn't already know what this film is all about? Lord knows, if you haven't seen it by now, nothing I can say will do any good. Scriptwriter Zapponi went on to help Paolo Cavara write the excellent E TANTA PAURA and so must be given credit here for his contribution. Composer Giorgio Gaslini also did the music for LIVING DEAD AT MANCHESTER MORGUE [DON'T OPEN THE WINDOW] and NIGHT OF THE DEVILS. Actor Lavia was in Pupi Avati's REVENGE OF THE DEAD and went on to direct EVIL SENSES. Macha Meril was the ultimate rich bitch in NIGHT TRAIN MURDERS by Aldo Lado.

1976 L'ASSASSINO È COSTRETTO

AD UCCIDERE ANCORA

THE KILLER STRIKES AGAIN

Director: Luigi Cozzi. Sc: Luigi Cozzi, Daniele Del Giudice, Adriano Bolzoni. Mus: Nando de Luca. Cast: George Hilton, Michel Antoine, Christine Galbo, Femi Benussi, Alessio Orano, Eduardo Fajardo.

Rating: ★★★☆

Comments: Had Luigi Cozzi used this film as an indication of his true talents, instead of going on to direct utter shit like STARCRASH and HERCULES, he might have been regarded with respect, rather than as the guy who works the counter at Dario Argento's Profundo Rosso's book store. George Hilton can't stand his shrew of a wife so he kills her and stuffs her in the trunk of his car.

There is an air of morbidity to this film that has rarely been equalled in any other thriller. Michel Antoine wins, hands down, the award for creepiest villain, period! When he relentlessly and repeatedly brutalizes poor Christine Galbo, it almost forces you to turn away from the screen. Galbo is a fine actress and is best known for her portrayal in THE HOUSE THAT SCREAMED. Alessio Orano is a scummy "hero" who is almost as scary-looking as the villain. Due to the two separate story lines, George Hilton has more of a guest star role in this film. He's a suave debonair Bastard as usual. Eduardo Fajardo gives a Colombo-type spin to his part as the police detective who just won't leave Hilton alone. He will always be remembered as the psychotic Colonel Jackson in DJANGO (did you know that Fred Ward dubbed Franco Nero's voice in that film? Thanks to Ally Lamaz for that important piece of trivia.). Lastly, there's poor, lovely (even in that awful blonde wig) Femi Benussi degrading herself in the cameo role of a floozy. Her entire part in this film is so she can be featured in an explicit nude scene and then be graphically slaughtered. It's roles like these that makes the Giallo films so politically incorrect.

PASSI DI MORTE PERDUTI NEL BUIO
DEATH STEPS IN THE DARK

Director: Maurizio Pradeaux. Sc: Arpad De Riso, Maurizio Pradeaux. Mus: Riz Ortolani. Cast: Leonard Mann, Robert Webber, Vera Kruska, Nino Maimone.

Rating: ★★

Comments: Lame is the only adjective I can use to describe this one. With this film and DEATH CARRIES A CANE, director Pradeaux proves he doesn't know shit about generating suspense. Time after time he dissipates mood and effect with his clumsy direction. The film opens on a train where we find the protagonists, Luciano (Leonard Mann who dubs his own voice) and his model girlfriend Ingrid (Vera Kruska in a performance that truly personifies the term, "dumb Blonde.") in a crowded compartment. A nervous young woman among the group is knifed with Luciano's letter opener during a blackout. Luciano becomes the main suspect of police inspector Robert Webber (who does not dub his own voice). As more of the train passengers get knocked off it becomes apparent that Luciano was setup. We tortuously make our way to the end of the film where Luciano has invited all the remaining suspects (along with the police inspector) to a fashion show featuring Ingrid (who proves during this sequence that she can't dance or model). Here, using a mask of one of the victims, the true murderer is revealed. The entire premise comes so far out of left field that you feel like you were just manipulated by a supreme hack, sort of like the Italian version of Sean Cunningham. The biggest knock on this film is the many attempts at slapstick pratfalls involving Luciano, Ingrid and a character called "Little Boffo". The film spends a record 15 minutes painfully watching them try and crack a safe. Other scenes of Leonard Mann in drag and hiding out in a shack next to the train tracks (so that every time one passes, the entire foundation shakes) just aren't funny. And why is it that every cop in these films has to be trying either to quit smoking, or be on a diet, or in this case, suffer from stomach problems? No discoveries here.

E TANTA PAURA
TOO MUCH FEAR

Director: Paolo Cavara. Sc: Paolo Cavara, Bernardino Zapponi. Mus: Daniele Patucchi. Cast: Corinne Clery, Michele Placido, Eli Wallach, John Steiner, Tom Skerritt.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Paolo Cavara's second thriller (his first was BLACK BELLY OF THE TARANTULA) is every bit as well done and riveting. The plot involves a wild sex party, attended by several rich and influential people (along with a fair share of prostitutes). Those attending are now being stalked and killed by a (Surprise!) black gloved maniac. Into this scenario comes Inspector Lorenzo (played by Michele Placido; he went on to play an Inspector in the wildly successful Italian TV series, OCTOPUS), a by-the-numbers cop, who stumbles upon clues through sheer bull-headedness, rather than the fine art of detection. He teams up with Janna (Corinne Clery from THE STORY OF O), a prostitute who was at the party and is now a potential victim. She tells him about a supposedly, accidental death that occurred there involving an inexperienced prostitute (she, at one point is made to crawl under the dinner table and give all the male guests blowjobs) who discovered a secret cache of diamonds. She was actually poisoned and as we discover near the film's conclusion, it is her father who is killing off the party goers in revenge for his daughter's death.

Maurizio Pradeaux's Death Carries A Cane (see page 26)

Director Cavara fills the motion picture (along with screenwriter Bernardo Zapponi who has also worked for Fellini, but I won't hold that against him) with offbeat incidents and characters: Clery's character is openly bi-sexual (much to Placido's disgust), a woman being interrogated by Placido faints dead away for no reason, a nurse is seen bringing herself to orgasm in a client's bathroom, making loud moaning noises and then leaving the household while her patient's son wonders what the hell that racket was. Cavara ladles on the gore and as the sordid subject matter requires, divvies out dollops of nudity. Tom Skerritt would go on to star in ALIEN and POLTERGEIST 2. Daniel Patucchi's score is superbly sleazy.

1977 LA CASA DELLA PAURA
GIRL IN ROOM 2A

Director: William Rose (?). Sc: William Rose. Mus: Berto Pisano. Cast: Daniela Giordano, Raf Vallone, Karin Schubert, Rosalba Neri, Brad Harris.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: A young girl named Edie is kidnapped off the street and taken to a country house where she is tied up and hung by her wrist from the ceiling. A long spear extends from the wall and penetrates the girl's body until she is killed. She is then thrown off a cliff to make it appear she committed suicide (what about the fact that she looks like a pin cushion?). Into this seedy scenario comes Margaret (Daniela Giordano), just released from a women's prison. With the help of Miss Songbird (Rosalba Neri) she ends up with a room at Mrs. Grant's. It doesn't take long for her to realize that she may have been better off in prison as she meets the eccentric characters around her. Mrs. Grant believes in punishing any wrong doing to the full letter of the law while her milque-toast son could pass for a serial killer. On top of that, she's followed around by bulky Mr. Dreese (Raf Vallone) who heads up a society of red-hooded members who carry out extreme measures against the possibly guilty parties staying at Mrs. Grant's. Into all this comes Edie's brother Jack who, along with Edie's old boyfriend Charlie (Brad Harris) end up rescuing Margaret from the cult's clutches.

The lead psychopath (the one in the red hood and pants) turns out to be Rosalba Neri. This has to be one of her strangest roles as she appears only at the very beginning and end of the picture. The end has her going over a cliff without a word of explanation as to why she was involved in these shenanigans. She's not even listed in the film's brief credit sequence. Poor Karin Schubert gets even worse treatment. She has one line of dialogue when first introduced, then later on appears so Vallone can pull her top off and cut her throat. She has more time gurgling than speaking in this laugh riot. No wonder she went on to star in porno films. She didn't have that much lower to go. Finally, I elect Berto Pisano's chase music in this film as the worst ever. It belongs in an elevator. If you look beyond the obvious sleaze, it's a truly laughable effort.

IL GATTO DAGLI OCCHI DI GIADA
WATCH ME WHEN I KILL

Director: Antonio Bido. Sc: Vittorio Schiraldi, Antonio Bido, Roberto Natale, Aldo Serio. Mus: Trans Europa Express. Cast: Corrado Pani, Paola Tedesco, Paolo Marco, Fernando Cerulli, Giuseppe Addobbati.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Mara (Paola Tedesco) is a dancer wooed by Carlo (Paolo Marco, who went on to star in Lucio Fulci's NEW YORK RIPPER and HOUSE BY THE CEMETERY), because he has written a movie script for her. Going to a pharmacy for some aspirin, where a murder has just taken place, she is soon terrorized by the killer who thinks he might be recognized. Mara moves in with her boyfriend Luca (Corrado Pani) who becomes thoroughly involved in trying to figure out who the murderer is. It seems the doctor who was killed at the pharmacy was mixed up with two others, Senor Botzi, a gnomish fellow, and Esmeralda, his mistress. When Botzi is strangled and Esmeralda has her face stuck in the oven and then into a hot soufflé, Luca begins to unravel the very complicated plotline. All three victims were Nazi collaborators during the war and knowingly participated in the death of a young Jewish mother and her daughter. The husband and son survived, with the father, thru the years, repeatedly urging his son to gain revenge over the three. That son turns out to be Carlo (just one of many ludicrous coincidences to be found here). The judge, disgusted by all the deaths, shoots both his son and himself. An incredibly talky film, Bido does salvage the thing with his staging of the stalking sequences and brief outbursts of violence. Corrado Pani does an excellent job as the nominal hero who perseveres until he uncovers the mystery. The music here, much like that for Bido's other thriller, SOLAMENTE NERO, is definitely an attempt to ape Goblin's score from SUSPIRIA. It's just as effective here.

L'OCCHIO DIETRO LA PARETE

(no known English Language title)

Director: Giuliano Petrelli. Sc: Giuliano Petrelli. Mus: Pippo Caruso. Cast: John Phillip Law, Fernando Rey, Olga Biserà, Jose Quaglio, Joseph Jenkins.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: A very disturbing, bleak film about a serial killer (John Phillip Law) and the couple who live next door to him. The twist is that Ivano (Fernando Rey) and his wife Olga (Olga Biserà) spy on him with a series of telescopes and microphones. The couple observe not only his daily routine of push-ups, showering and dressing, but also his methods of disposing of unwanted company. On top of that, they have a butler Ottavio (Jose Quaglio) who indulges in such anti-social acts as having sex with under age girls and stealing Olga's bra and panties, hanging them on the door of his closet and stabbing the crotch with a knife. Inevitably Ivano goads Olga into developing a personal relationship with Arturo (JPL) to excite him to even greater heights of pleasure. Unfortunately he didn't bargain on their falling in love. In a shocking finale, Olga and Ivano (who happens to be a cripple, the reasons for this are explained midway in the film) follow Arturo as he drives off in his car. When Olga discovers, to her horror, that he's going to commit suicide by torching himself inside his car, she rushes to aid him. She ends up perishing alongside him as the butler and Ivano watch helplessly.

I couldn't help being depressed for days after watching this morbid exercise in wallowing within the depths of despair. The film's environment allows one to conjure up all types of related allusions to other similar cinematic endeavors. Two that come to mind are THE SORCERERS (Especially when Rey and Bisera are observing JPL doing pushups in the nude. They both get so excited, independently each one reaches an orgasm. I was reminded of the elderly couple in that British film) and REAR WINDOW by Hitchcock. A final remark has to be made about the graphic nature of the sex scenes here. Watching JPL and Olga Bisera make love near the film's finale (previously, whenever Law came within an inch of a sexual encounter, his reaction was to kill the other person) you get the impression these people really know how to FUCK! A more detailed review of the film is required and who the Hell is Giuliano Petrelli?

LA RAGAZZA DAL PIGIAMA GIALLO
THE PYJAMA GIRL CASE

Director: Flavio Mogherini. Sc: Flavio Mogherini. Mus: Riz Ortolani. Cast: Dalila Di Lazzaro, Ray Milland, Michele Placido, Mel Ferrer, Howard Ross.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: I reviewed this one last issue so I won't go into detail here. Milland's performance is spectacular and a tribute to his talents that he didn't just cash a paycheck and walk through it. When he mimics a character's activity with his hand (the guy was masturbating right before Milland arrived to question him) and says "Have a good time" you know he's enjoying himself. The film being made in Australia (true to the origins of the story) sets the stage for a unique take on Italo-exploitation. Howard Ross does his umpteenth take on being a cad, while Placido is allowed to play a character rather unique for him. He's very successful in building his character's frustrations to the point of no return. Director Mogherini was another art director turned successful film director. The fact that he both wrote and directed this film allows him all the credit for the film's brilliant use of parallel story lines that come to a head for a very effective finale. A must see!

SETTE NOTE IN NERO
THE PSYCHIC

Director: Lucio Fulci. Sc: Lucio Fulci, Roberto Gianviti, Dardano Sacchetti. Mus: Bixio-Frizzi-Tempera. Cast: Jennifer O'Neill, Gianni Garko, Marc Porel, Gabriele Ferzetti, Evelyn Stewart, Jenny Tamburi.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: A young girl psychically witnesses her mother's death (she jumps from a cliff and, much like the effect Fulci used in DON'T TORTURE A DUCKLING, her face explodes as it hits the rocky edges). Years later, Victoria (Jennifer O'Neill) moves with her new husband (Gianni Garko, the star of the prolific Spaghetti Western series, SARTANA) to a dilapidated villa. She continues to have visions of death and so visits a psychiatrist (Marc Porel) on a regular basis. What she doesn't realize is that her latest round of visions are a preview of her own death. It seems her husband is planning on doing away with her so he can live with the family friend, played by Evelyn Stewart. In a nod to Poe, he walls her up at the villa (a method also used by Fulci in the aptly titled, THE BLACK CAT) only to be undone by a watch on O'Neill that begins chiming at an inopportune time. Made right before Fulci hit it big with ZOMBIE, the film is another excellent example of his work that depended on plot and filmmaking skill and not excessive gore to tell an interesting story.

1978 ENIGMA ROSSO

RED RINGS OF FEAR aka TRAUMA

Director: Alberto Negrin. Sc: Alberto Negrin, Marcello Coscia, Massimo Dallamano, Franco Ferrini, Stefano Ubezzi, Peter Berling. Mus: Riz Ortolani. Cast: Fabio Testi, Christine Kaufman, Ivan Desny, Jack Taylor, Helga Liné (unbilled).

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: A 17 year old female student is found dead with the lower half of her anatomy torn open by a sharp, phallic weapon (ie, a dildo). Inspector Di Salvo (Fabio Testi) is given the case to solve but is told to not make waves as the girl was from a rich, influential family. His investigation reveals that the girl, along with her three classmates were involved in a sex party ring. Rich businessmen would pay highly for the services. Two separate murder attempts are taking place. The remaining girls are being threatened and the sleazebags behind procuring the girls is also being knocked off. Testi solves both plot lines as one murderer commits suicide while the other is stopped before successfully snuffing anyone.

Note who had a hand in the screenplay: Massimo Dallamano.... he had already directed two thrillers set at a girl's boarding school, WHAT HAVE THEY DONE TO SOLANGE? and WHAT HAVE THEY DONE TO OUR DAUGHTERS?, so you gotta wonder if he decided enough was enough, passing the reigns on to Negrini (who would go on to make big budget Euro TV fare like IL DULCE [SWEET] with Bob Hoskins). Jack Taylor has a nice role as the ferret-like owner of a clothing store who helps reel in the girls. He meets a fitting end. The murder sequences are graphic and the shower scenes numerous, but by now the concept was showing signs of wear and tear. At least Ortolani scored enthusiastically (especially the main theme).

Bob Sargent of Videooze Magazine points out that Helga Liné appears in an unbilled cameo as the mother of the first victim.

SOLAMENTE NERO ONLY BLACKNESS

Director: Antonio Bido. Sc: Antonio Bido, Domenico Malon, Marisa Andalo. Mus: Stelvio Cipriani. Cast: Lino Capolicchio, Stefania Casini, Craig Hill, Massimo Serato.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Like Bido's other thriller (WATCH ME WHEN I KILL), this film is too talky, however it does show an improvement in directorial technique that makes this overly long (105 minutes) Giallo well worth tracking down. The film opens with a flashback of a man dressed in black murdering a young girl. She is seen clutching some pages out of a book, all this is important and will be revealed by film's end. Stefano (Lino Capolicchio of LA CASA DELLE FINISTRE CHE RIDONO, 1975) arrives back home in Venice to see his brother, a priest named Paolo (Craig Hill, who dubs his own voice). He learns about a group of people who all hate Paolo for his beliefs. They include Dr. Aluisi, who accidentally killed his wife while cleaning his gun, Nardi, a woman who performs abortions and Count Pedrazzi (Massimo Serrato, a master at portraying decadent characters), a child-molesting homosexual.

They all visit a medium and when she is killed one night in a thunderstorm, that only Paolo witnessed, he finds himself a likely candidate for becoming victim #2. Stefano meets Sandra (Stefania Casini, who was also in SUSPIRIA), an interior decorator also returning home to visit, we know it's a cue for the obligatory romance and nude lovemaking sequence. Meanwhile, first the Count and then the doctor are killed off in gruesome fashion. The lone survivor, Nardi, has a retarded son who sure acts suspiciously like a psycho-killer (where have we seen that subplot before?), so of course he's innocent. When she's found dead, along with the evidence proving that Paolo killed the young girl at the beginning of the film, Stefano confronts his brother. Paolo freaks, hallucinates that he gives all of the dead communion, then rushes to the top of the Church bell tower where he, FALLS FROM A GREAT HEIGHT AND DIES! Unfortunately for Bido, the foley effects people screwed up and had the sound of the body hitting the ground happen before the action takes place!

Cipriani appears to have been given precise instructions to ape Goblin's score for SUSPIRIA at all costs. He does a fine job, but there's hardly anything creative in that. Lino Capolicchio looks like a young Harlan Ellison and gives a fine performance as a man caught up in the tragic events. Bido effectively mixes grue with suspense and even pays a tribute to Val Lewton's "bus" technique of having a character walking along quietly when from out of nowhere, a loud noise and object (in this case, an accordion player) come crashing into them. It's a cheap, but effective way of getting the audience to jump.

LA SORELLA DI URSULA THE CURSE OF URSULA

Director: Enzo Milioni. Sc: Enzo Milioni. Mus: Mimi Uva. Cast: Barbara Magnolfi, Stefania D'Amario, Anna Zinemmann, Antinissa Nemour, Marc Porel.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: This is one of those ratings I have to explain.

Lord knows this film stinks... but you have to admire one that features a killer who uses a rather unique weapon, his DICK! Enzo Milioni concocted this perverse tale and you have to wonder what possessed him to make it. Dagmar (Stefania D'Amario) and her younger sister Ursula (Barbara Magnolfi) are on vacation at a seaside resort.

Before long, other tourists from their hotel (obviously female), become the victims of the Long Dong Killer. Is it Roberto, the older gentleman who enjoys backdoor action or Felipe (Marc Porel), a worthless drug addict? Surprise, it's Ursula, who actually uses a long ebony dildo to gain revenge on the women with such loose morals. It would not surprise me at all if Milioni didn't go on to work in porno as the sex scenes are definitely borderline in that direction. Much like Daniel White's score to Jesus Franco's LOVES OF IRINA, Mimi Uva's one note concoction will have you screaming for mercy by film's end. Speaking of which, Ursula is dispatched from a fall off her balcony. Now where have we seen that one before?

1979 GIALLO A VENEZIA

MYSTERY IN VENICE

Director: Mario Landi. Sc: Aldo Serio. Mus: Berto Pisano.

Cast: Gianni Dei, Gabriele Renzullo, Eolo Capri, Maria Angela Giordan.

Rating: ★★

Comments: The only reason this film gets two stars is the presence of Maria Angela Giordan (THE SECT) and the over-the-top gore sequences. Very little else in this stupid film deserves merit. The film's parallel story line involves a sadistic serial killer and a young couple involved in twisted sex games. Fabio (Gianni Dei) can only work up the desire for his wife, Flavia, if she is getting screwed by an outside party. So, poor Flavia is repeatedly humiliated until she has had enough. Since the serial killer is easily apprehended you begin to feel his sole reason for him being here was to provide the film it's most spectacularly nasty death sequence involving Ms. Giordan. Flavia, meanwhile decides to kill both her husband and herself. This rancid piece of shit is a travesty of a film. Everyone in this film, except poor Flavia, makes you sick to your stomach. Even the police inspector engages in the disgusting habit of cramming hard-boiled eggs down his gullet (but why?). Berto Pisano's score sounds like it belongs in an MGM musical. Did the director arbitrarily steal it from another source and shove it in wherever he felt? This film is a turd floater of immense proportions. Don't let the ★★ rating fool you.

1980 FOLLIA OMICIDA aka L'OSSESSIONE CHE UCCIDE
UNCONSCIOUS aka FEAR aka THE WAILING

Director: Riccardo Freda. Sc: Riccardo Freda, Antonio Corti, Fabio Piccioni. Mus: Franco Mannino. Cast: Stefano Patrizi, Anita Strindberg, John Richardson, Laura Gemser, Martine Brochard, Silvia Dionisio.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: This film definitely takes the kitchen sink approach to plot elements. It features a little bit of everything, from a traditional stalk and slash killer to a Mother only Norman Bates could love to Black Mass and mind control. All that plus large amounts of nudity and gore show that Freda was far from over the hill when he made this film. Michael Stanford is an actor who decides to return home and visit dear old Mom. He brings along his girlfriend Deborah (Silvia Dionisio) and invites his director Hans, lead actress Beryl (Laura Gemser) and assistant director Shirley (Martine Brochard). Upon arriving, they meet creepy Oliver (John Richardson) and of course, Mother (Anita Strindberg, still looking good and proving that silicon implants do hold up over the years). Almost immediately strange things start to happen as Beryl is strangled in her bath and Deborah dreams of Black Magic rituals. When people start dying (in very graphic, bloody fashion) it's made to look like Michael has gone off the deep end (he supposedly killed his father when he was younger). Michael finally discovers that his Mother and her lover Oliver, were behind the murders. In fact, Oliver is so disgusted with it all, he commits suicide. Deborah turns up at the end just in time to discover that Mom has killed Michael and she too is trapped and about to become the next victim.

Freda must have been in a bad mood when he made this one as no one survives to the end except Strindberg, giving the performance of her career as the Mom from Hell. Pulchritude is at an all time high in this one especially Silvia Dionisi (who looks like Olivia-Newton John). The U.S. video version edits out her second dream/Black Mass sequence, either because a real chicken gets beheaded or because there's an embarrassingly fake spider that makes the ones in MESA OF LOST WOMAN look terrific by comparison. The film telegraphs its shock sequences such as when a character is seen cutting wood with a chainsaw, you just know that implement will make a return appearance with far more gruesome results. Franco Mannino's score veers from grandiose orchestral themes to sleazy synthesizer beeps that ruin whatever mood he was trying to maintain.

1982 LA CASA CON LA SCALA NEL BUIO
A BLADE IN THE DARK

Director: Lamberto Bava. Sc: Dardano Sacchetti, Elisa Briganti. Mus: Guido & Maurizio De Angelis. Cast: Andrea Occhipinti, Lara Naszinski, Anny Papa, Michele Soavi, Stanko Molnar, Fabiola Toledo.

Rating: ★★☆

Comments: This film was obviously Lamberto Bava's shot at proving to Dario Argento that he could follow in his, rather than his father's foot steps. It must have worked as Bava went on to direct the two DEMONS' films under Argento's guidance. The film opens with a young blonde headed boy (he was called Bob, in Fulci's HOUSE BY THE CEMETERY, but I always refer to him as the pig-faced kid) being dared into going down into a dark cellar. We soon learn this is a scene from a horror film that Bruno (Andrea Occhipinti) is doing the music for. It contains a clear indication of just how poor the dubbing will be on this film (Very few of the principals speak English) when we hear a chorus of "You're a female." (indicating the scared boy's lack of nerve). Bruno is renting a villa from the wealthy Tony (Future wunderkind director, Michele Soavi) while he works on the score. Instantly he begins to experience weird happenings such as hearing strange voices and running into weird neighbors. He suspects people around him are being killed off, but he can't ever prove it. When his girlfriend Julia (Lara Naszinski) comes to stay, all hell breaks loose as she along with everyone else in the cast are murdered (in quite nasty fashions) as we (and Bruno) discover that the killer turns out to be Tony. It seems poor Tony was ridiculed as a boy about his effeminate ways causing him to adopt a female persona, Linda. He would don makeup and dress and murder those who reminded him of his unhappy childhood.

This film was definitely influenced by TENEBRAE, it even looks like it was shot on the same grounds as where John Steiner's character, in that film, lived. Bava uses a roaming camera and stages similar stalk and slash sequences (especially a murder that takes place in a bathroom). Occhipinti looks like a young Tom Hanks and does a decent job as the audience identifier. Stanko Molnar, who was so good in MACABRO, is wasted here as groundskeeper whose only around to be killed off near the end. The death of Julia at the end seems pointless and gratuitous. Who ever dubbed this must have had fun, making up lines like, "Is it possible you're a vacant nerd?!"

LO SQUARTATORE DI NEW YORK THE NEW YORK RIPPER

Director: Lucio Fulci. Sc: Lucio Fulci, Gianfranco Clerici, Dardano Sacchetti, Vincenzo Mannino. Mus: Francesco De Masi. Cast: Jack Hedley, Almanta Keller (Antonella Interlenghi), Howard Ross, Alexandra Delli Colli, Paolo Marco, Andrea Occhipinti.

Rating: ★

Comments: I think I hate this Fulci film about as much as anything else he has done (except for his more recent "comeback" films). It's exploitation in the worst way as Fulci takes on the film aesthetics of H.G. Lewis. That Clerici and Sacchetti were involved in the script only shows how poorly Fulci executed their ideas. Obviously influenced by all the slasher swill coming from the U.S. at the time, Fulci has made a film every bit as repugnant as a FRIDAY THE 13TH clone. That takes no talent. Jack Hedley plays the cop in charge of the investigation and gives the only interesting performance. Alexandra Delli Colli (ZOMBIE HOLOCAUST) and Howard Ross are featured in the low points of their respective careers in the sex club sequence.

Have I mentioned that I hate this film? The idea of the killer using a Donald Duck-type voice is a fucking embarrassment and does nothing more than induce a cynical audience to laugh even harder at the goings on. The murders are gruesome and nudity abundant but the film is so relentlessly hateful toward the female gender that no amount of fanboy appreciation will ever sway my opinion of it. A shame that Francesco De Masi's wonderful score appears in such a sack-of-shit film.

TENEBRAE UNSALE

Director: Dario Argento. Sc: Dario Argento, George Kemp. Mus: Simonetti, Pignatelli, Norante. Cast: Anthony Franciosa, Daria Nicolodi, John Saxon, Giuliano Gemma, Eva Robins/Roberto Coatti, Mirella D'Angelo, John Steiner, Ania Pieroni, Lara Wendel.

Rating: ★★★★★

Comments: My favorite of Argento's thrillers, TENEBRAE features all the standbys that this genre survives on. There are multiple killers (Steiner and Franciosa), nudity and gore. Stylish photography by color expert Luciano Tovoli and a great musical score by the remnants of Goblin. Thank God the original version of this film exists on Japanese laser disc.

1983 MURDEROCK: UCCIDE A PASSO DI DANZA MURDEROCK: DANCING DEATH

Director: Lucio Fulci. Sc: Lucio Fulci, Gianfranco Clerici, Vincenzo Mannino, Roberto Gianviti. Mus: Keith Emerson. Cast: Olga Karlatos, Ray Lovelock, Claudio Cassinelli, Cosimo Cinieri, Al Cliver.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: People always take pot shots at this film because of the opening breakdancing (remember that useless fad?) sequence. Considering that it never occurs again, that's a dishonest approach to take when reviewing this film. Actually, it's a better than average thriller that showcases Fulci to his best advantage. Auditions are being held at the Arts For Living Center where dancers are trying to get one of three parts in a musical show. Dick (Claudio Cassinelli, who is dubbed by the prolific Edmund Purdom), the owner of the building, and Candice (Olga Karlatos, who had her eye poked out in Fulci's ZOMBIE) are responsible for choosing the finalist. When the best dancer of the group, Susan, has her heart punctured by a long needle, it doesn't take a rocket scientist to figure out that someone wants the job so bad they're willing to kill for it. Onto the scene comes Inspector Borges (I wish I knew who this actor was, he's perfect for the role), a world weary detective who has the single best line of dialogue in the film. When he is confronted by a punk kid who's obviously not the killer, he describes him thusly, "He's not a psycho, he's an asshole."

Candice is haunted by dreams featuring a handsome man trying to kill her. When she discover he's actually a model named George Webb (Ray Lovelock, who never ages), she ends up meeting him and falling in love. More dancers are being killed and the evidence points to George. By film's end we discover that the killer was actually Candice, who was jealous of her students' opportunity to hit the big time. She framed George as the killer because ten years ago, just when she was about to star on Broadway, she was run over by a motorcycle, driven by ol George. She ends up committing suicide when her plan is discovered. The method of murder used by the killer here while not graphically gory, is sure to make you flinch as that long needle is slowly pushed through the victim's chest cavity.

Look for a cameo by Al Cliver as a police voice specialist and Fulci as Phil, an agent friend of Karlatos.

MYSTERE DAGGER EYES

Director: Carlo Vanzina. Sc: Carlo Vanzina, Enrico Vanzina.

Mus: Armando Trovajoli. Cast: Carole Bouquet, Duilio Del Prete, John Steiner, Gabriele Tinti, Janet Agren.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: My memory of this film was pretty favorable so it came as a shock when I rewatched it for this article and realized my first impression was dead wrong. The big problem is that Carlo Vanzina (son of Stefano Vanzina, aka Steno) has made a cock teasing thriller. It's obvious Vanzina isn't at all comfortable with the sleazy surroundings so he avoids allowing his thespians to get down and dirty. This is the type of film (the "erotic" thriller) that is all the rage these days in Hollywood. What they don't realize is that Italy was doing it 20 years ago, on a lot less money with much better results. Mystere (Carol Bouquet, who honest to God looks like Vampira in this one) is a high priced call girl, who has the unfortunate luck of becoming involved in assassination and blackmail. She has ended up with a cigarette lighter that contains film showing who the assassin is. The killer, played by John Steiner, fails at several attempts to regain the lighter. By this time, Mystere is being protected by Colt, (Philip Coccioletti) a cop who looks more at home on the cover of Esquire magazine than catching a murderer. Not helping matters is Colt's boss (played by Del Prete) who is involved with Steiner and is also murdering anyone who might reveal their identity. Colt and Mystere teamup (and repeatedly double-cross each other) and escape with the million bucks Steiner has paid for the negatives. Even though they eventually kill Steiner (Son-of-a-bitch! It's the old fake dummy falling from a high building trick) it ends with his assistant getting ready to finish the job. The main star of this film is the costume designer as more thought is put into Bouquet's wardrobe than the script. Vanzina wastes talents like Janet Agren (as a fellow hooker) and Gabriele Tinti (as a pimp with a heart of gold) and refuses to do more than let the proceedings trend toward exploitation before switching to something more comfortable. Armando Trovaiola is a composer that usually scores films with elevator music, but here does everything he can to get this film going. Too bad he's let down by Vanzina at every turn.

THRAUMA

Director: Gianni Martucci. Sc: Gianni Martucci, Alessandro Capone, Ronny Russo. Mus: Ubaldo Continiello.

Cast: Ronny Russo, Roberto Posse, Timothy Wood, Franco Diogene.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Here's an obscure one for you. It stars no one famous (although tub-of-lard Franco Diogene is also in NUDE PER L'ASSASSINO) and was directed by Gianni Martucci, who turned up as boss on a film often mis-credited to Lucio Fulci, RED MONKS, made in the late eighties.

After surviving the horrid disco beat playing over the opening credits, we are introduced to an ugly guy, playing with a set of building blocks down in a dank cellar. A diverse group of people are spending the weekend at the home of Carlo (Roberto Posse) and Silvia. They include a photographer and his model who decide to branch off from the rest to enable Paul to take some nude shots of Olga. Afterwards, Olga is left by her self and is attacked by the madman seen at the film's opening. In a bit of perversity, after killing her with a machete, this sickie is seen making love to her dead corpse! Andrea (Ronny Russo) is a sleazebag who tries to rape his girlfriend just because, with death all around them, she ain't in the mood! More deaths by machete occur before we discover that the killer is Andreas' brother and he is using them to kill off the guests so he can say he pulled off the perfect crime. It ends with Andreas uttering just that as he approaches Lili with machete in hand and the film freeze frames. Quickly paced at 74 minutes, you just have to believe the film is missing a reel somewhere. Ineptly made (in one scene you can see the microphone at the top of the frame!), the film at least possesses exploitation staples such as nudity and gore. The last 15 minutes has the killer stalking Lili, and there's not a bit of suspense generated as everyone moves so damn slow. As sleazy as it is, maybe that's not enough; perhaps the film deserves its obscurity.

1985 L'ASSASSINO E ANCORA TRA NOI

(no known English Language title)

Director: Camillo Teti. Sc: Ernesto Gastaldi, Camillo Teti. Mus: Detto Mariano. Cast: Mariangela D'Abbraccio, Giovanni Visentin, Riccardo Perrotti, Luigi Mezzanotte, Yvonne D'Abbraccio.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: If this film had any kind of an interesting middle section to go along with the opening and especially the disturbing conclusion, it would have rated much higher. It is based on a true story (see the review of MONSTER OF FLORENCE) about a killer who guns down lovemaking couples in the woods. This version centers around a police woman in charge of the investigation (Mariangela D'Abbraccio). The middle portion dully portrays her personal and professional life to the point of tedium. The last ten minutes of this film are so wild and out of place that it's worth hanging around for. The woman attends a seance where she experiences the killer brutally slaughtering a couple as they make love in a tent (oddly, this is the way MONSTER OF FLORENCE [IL MOSTRO DI FIRENZE] begins). The gore quotient here is very disturbing as we see the killer carve the nipples off the female victim and even worse, cut out the girl's genitalia! It's done in an agonizingly slow manner which makes it all the more realistic. The film ends with the policewoman running off to meet her boyfriend at a theater playing the film, L'ASSASSINO E ANCORA TRA NOI!! A very strange film indeed.

IL MOSTRO DI FIRENZE

THE MONSTER OF FLORENCE

Director: Cesare Ferrario. Sc: Cesare Ferrario, Bruno Noris. Mus: Paolo Rustichelli. Cast: Leonard Mann, Bettina Giovini, Gabriele Tinti, Francesca Muzio, Federico Pacifici.

Rating: ★★

Comments: A couple is seen about to get it on in a tent, in the middle of the woods when a man appears in a heavy coat. He blasts the woman with a 45 and gives chase to her boyfriend. It's a quick slit of the throat and some more rounds fired to help finish off the victim. This activity has been going on, once a year, for the past 16 years. Andreas (Leonard Mann, who must live a clean life as he hasn't aged much in the twenty years he's been making films in Italy), a journalist, and his girlfriend Julia (Bettina Giovini) began an investigation into who the killer is and why it's been occurring. The problem with this debut film by Cesare Ferrario (and what got him into hot water when this film debuted) is that it's based on a true story without an ending. The killer has never been caught and so his attempt at providing an ending along with a reason behind the killings is spotty at best. Ferrario's pedestrian answer to the events involve a man who, as a young boy, witnessed his Mom and Dad in a menage-a trois. This event apparently so warped his mind that any type of illicit couplings brings on a killing rage.

Yawn, wasn't that the plot to umpteen slasher films made here in the eighties? While there are a few breasts and drops of blood, the pace is likened to a Movie-of-the-Week affair. Second generation composer Paolo Rustichelli (Carlo's son) creates a morose and solemn mood with a small sized string orchestra. Gabriele Tinti has a blink and you'll miss it cameo as newspaperman.

SEVEN HYDEN PARK: LA CASA MALEDETTA FORMULA FOR A MURDER

Director: Martin Herbert (Alberto De Martino). Sc: Alberto De Martino, Hank Walker. Mus: Francesco De Masi. Cast: Christina Nagy, David Warbeck, Carroll Blumenberg, Rossano Brazzi.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Christina Nagy was attacked (and raped) by a psychopath (posing as a priest) as a child, resulting in her being both crippled and frigid. Into her life comes David Warbeck, a kind and loving physical therapist. In no time at all they marry, much to the disgust of Nagy's personal secretary, Carroll Blumenberg (who is in love with Nagy). Of course all of this plot detail that we receive initially turns out to be a sham. Blumenberg and Warbeck are actually lovers and they are attempting to drive Nagy to suicide (Warbeck dresses up as a priest and terrorizes Christina). The twist in all this is that Warbeck is so crazy that he kills off Blumenberg in a frenzy and during the final 30 minutes, covered in blood, he resembles Jack Nicholson's character from THE SHINING. It's a marvelous over-the-top performance that is aided by the fact that Warbeck does indeed look like Nicholson. For shame to whoever decided to re-use parts of Francesco De Masi's score from THE NEW YORK RIPPER.

SOTTO IL VESTITO NIENTE NOTHING UNDERNEATH

Director: Carlo Vanzina. Sc: Carlo Vanzina, Enrico Vanzina, Franco Ferrini. Mus: Pino Donaggio. Cast: Tom Schanley, Renee Simonsen, Nicola Perrina, Maria McDonald, Donald Pleasance.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Compared to Vanzina's MYSTERE [DAGGER EYES] this film represents a quantum leap in quality. This time out, he revels in sleaze, and doesn't shy away from the much needed exploitive elements presented by the script. Since scriptwriter Ferrini was involved in Dario Argento's PHENOMENA, you have to wonder if he contributed the ESP subplot to this film. The movie opens at beautiful Yellowstone National Park where Bob, a park ranger, experiences a psychic flash from his twin sister Jessica, who is living in Milan as a model. He feels she is in great danger and so high tails it to Italy. Once there, he can not locate her and so goes to the police. The inspector (Donald Pleasance, in a marvelous performance) has no evidence of foul play and so Bob is on his own trying to discover what happened to his sister. He soon learns that she was invited to a sleazy party where one of her model friends was killed playing Russian Roulette. She, along with all the other participants at the party was paid off in diamonds to keep her mouth shut. Now, all those girls are being killed off by someone who uses a pair of scissors. When it begins to appear that Jessica may be alive and behind the murders, Bob gets disgusted and heads for the airport back home. However, before he gets there, he discovers the killer is Barbara (Renee Simonsen), Jessica's lesbian lover, who was afraid she was about to lose her and was disgusted with their lifestyle. Barbara has also killed Jessica and nailed her body to a chair, but carries on around her like she is still alive. When her secret is discovered by Bob and the Inspector, she, along with the lifeless body of Jessica, plunge out of the highrise apartment to her death.

Fortunately, we are spared the sight of another fake-looking dummy being flung to the ground. In fact, Vanzina stages the final scene as a tribute to Argento's 4 FLIES ON GREY VELVET, complete with slow motion and Music by Donaggio that apes Morricone's score for that film. A superlative effort by Vanzina who unfortunately went the route of Pupi Avati towards respectability.

1986 MORIRAI A MEZZANOTTE
YOU'LL DIE AT MIDNIGHT

Director: Lamberto Bava. Sc: John Old Jr. (Lamberto Bava), Dardano Sacchetti. Mus: Claudio Simonetti. Cast: Valeria D'Obici, Leonardo Treviglio, Lea Martino, Eliana Hoppe, Paolo Marco, Lara Wendel.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Lamberto Bava continues to get a raw deal in the fan press for his TV movies (of which this is one). It's true that THE OGRE and GRAVEYARD DISTURBANCE aren't exactly masterpieces, but they and especially this film, put 90 % of the horror TV movies in this country to shame. Nicola (who is a cop) and his rich/bitch wife are fighting again only this time, she turns up dead (killed, once again in a shower with an icepick thrust through the curtain and into her torso). Nicola (Leonardo Treviglio) is the prime suspect and one of his co-workers, Inspector Pierro Terzi (Paolo Marco) is assigned to the case. Anna (Valeria D'Obici) is a criminal psychiatrist who is a friend of both men. She refuses to believe that Nicola is guilty, instead, she postulates that the killer is really Tribbo, a madman supposedly killed several years ago in a hospital fire where she worked. Even after Nicola is killed (he was involved in a scuffle with Anna), the murders continue, lending credence to Anna's theories. Terzi's daughter Carol (Lea Martino) is threatened by the killer and so she and two school friends head to an abandoned hotel for safety. I think we can see where this is leading. The killer follows the girls and after killing all but Carol, Paolo arrives in time to blow the murderer away. Sure enough, it was Anna who was dressing up as Tribbo, complete with mask, to kill off members of the cast. Why, you ask? It seems she was raped by Tribbo while working at the hospital and this act drove her to madness.

While Bava and Sacchetti have brought nothing new to the genre with their script, it is Bava's camera placement and technique (along with yet another excellent score by Simonetti) that save the day. The last third of the film owes a lot to Sergio Martino's TORSO when the three girls isolate themselves at the abandoned hotel. It slackens the pace considerably as we wait for the killer to stalk his victim. Bava casts the crucial part of Anna with an androgynous actress that helps to sell the fact that she dresses as a man whenever the act of murder occurs. Look for Lamberto in a swift cameo as the police photographer who appears in the background at the scene of the first murder.

1987 AQUARIUS aka DELIRIA
STAGEFRIGHT

Director: Michele Soavi. Sc: Lew Cooper (Luigi Montefiori). Mus: Simon Boswell. Cast: Barbara Cupisti, David Brandon, Don Fiore, Robert Gligorov, John Morghen (Giovanni Lombardo Radice).

Rating: ★★★☆

Comments: Peter (David Brandon) is the director of a Slasher Musical (now there's a novel concept!). He has the bad luck of having a homicidal maniac escape from a nearby psychiatric clinic and make his way into the theater where the play's rehearsal is taking place. Being the typical megalomaniacal director, he decides to capitalize on the escape and work it into the story line, not realizing, until it's too late that the killer has indeed taken over the lead.

Everyone knows this is Soavi's debut directorial credit, which came about due to Joe D'Amato. It certainly follows the lead of the U.S. slasher films made in the early eighties, but Director Soavi pulls out all the stops to make the usual cliches more enjoyable. John Morghen gives a delightful performance as Brett who is mistaken as the killer and killed by his director (a thought that has no doubt crossed Soavi's mind at times). Barbara Cupisti (who looks like Margot Kidder) as Alicia, gives a strong performance and indicates he may become the George Cukor of the Italian horror genre (It's a joke!).

ARABELLA L'ANGELO NERO
ANGELA, THE BLACK ANGEL

Director: Max Steel (Stelvio Massi). Sc: R. Filippucci. Mus: Serfran. Cast: Tini Cansino, Valentina Visconti, Francesco Casale, Carlo Mucari, Evelyn Stewart.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: Here's a sexy, sleazy thriller that absolutely gets down into the filth and wallows around like a pro. No wonder Stelvio Massi uses a pseudonym here as it's like no other film he's made. You have to think the presence of Betty Page imitator Tini Cansino inspired the direction of this one. Here's a woman who deserves to be seen absolutely nude. She plays a sexpot wife to Francesco, who was crippled on their wedding day because Tini was giving him a blow job while he was driving their car, and ended up having an accident. He's obviously been bitter about it ever since and so takes every opportunity to remind her of it. She in turn seeks sexual pleasure from every Tom, Dick (oops) and Harry she meets. This includes a vice cop who busts her during a raid on a sex club (the activities are revealed during the wonderfully perverted opening credits). When he, along with private eye who is spying on Cansino, are knifed to death, a lesbian Police Inspector (Valentina Visconti) is assigned the case. Just to muddy the waters, it is revealed that she is the daughter of a convicted killer and suffers from dreams that involve being stabbed in the crotch with a pair of scissors. The only person who appears to be normal is Francesco's mom (played by Evelyn Stewart), so of course she is revealed to be the killer. It seems, she was tired of watching Cansino fuck around on her son. In a twisted finale, she accidentally kills Francesco (who was boning Tini in the park), thinking him a male prostitute. Sex and violence are on display here in all its glory. When one of the victims is killed, we see one of the policeman walking around with a bloody handkerchief, which contains the poor man's penis. A nasty exercise in exploitation.

Luciano Ercoli's Death Walks in High Heels (see page 16)

CAMPING DEL TERRORE BODY COUNT

Director: Ruggero Deodato. Sc: Alex Capone, David Parker, Sheila Goldberg, Luca D'Alisera. Mus: Claudio Simonetti. Cast: Bruce Penhall, Mimsy Farmer, David Hess, John Steiner, Ivan Rassimov, Charles Napier.

Rating: ★★★

Comments: For writers and viewers who think Deodato should spend the rest of his life making Cannibal Films, this one will be an instant turnoff. For those with a more open outlook on life, BODY COUNT (like all the films Deodato made after CANNIBAL HOLOCAUST, reveals a sure directorial hand in charge of a genre vilified by most. This is a slasher film for those of us who hate them. Unlike many thrillers covered here, BODY COUNT truly has its origins in the eighties. It contains the trappings of the genre, such as a group of obnoxious teens, an isolated location in the woods, promiscuous activity with ample nudity, POV camera angles that trick us into thinking we're about to witness a murder (but don't) and gore. Fortunately, the scriptwriters also give us a parallel story line involving adults, dealing with love and betrayal. It is this activity that sets the film apart.

The adult actors are all top-notch veterans of Euro and USA exploitation. Mimsy Farmer (who does not receive any billing) and David Hess are a married couple who long ago quit loving each other, while local cop Charles Napier is Farmer's true love. Their affair actually causes Mimsy's son to go crazy and kill off the teens who wandered into the area by mistake. Two other Euro-vets, John Steiner as a doctor and Ivan Rassimov as Napier's partner may have small roles, but it's good to see them in anything this late in the cycle. I would kill to have Claudio Simonetti's score on tape, record or CD.

CARAMELLE DA UNO SCONOSCIUTO SWEETS FOR A STRANGER

Director: Franco Ferrini. Sc: Franco Ferrini, Andrea Giuseppini. Mus: Umberto Smaila. Cast: Barbara De Rossi, Marina Suma, Athina Cerci, Mara Venier, Laura Betti.

Rating: ★★

Comments: Director Ferrini has scripted many projects for Dario Argento (CHURCH, OPERA, PHENOMENA and 2 EVIL EYES) so I had rather high hopes for his directorial debut. As you can see from the above rating, he certainly fell short of the mark. The film's plot centers around a group of prostitutes who find themselves the victims of a killer who brandishes a straight razor. Where the film bogs down is Ferrini's detailing the minutia of their daily lives. His bid for respectability requires him to focus on the non-exploitive factors such as where they eat, what they wear and discussion groups centering on the travails of being a "working" woman. An admirable approach but for fans of these films, IT'S THE WRONG FUCKING ONE! The film's central character is Elena (Barbara De Rossi) who discovers the killer to be the young daughter of one of the prostitutes. The finale featuring her being unmasked with razor in hand and wearing a ballerina tutu is pretty silly. Laura Betti makes an appearance as a very down-on-her-luck, drunken whore and for those who remember her from BAY OF BLOOD, it's a depressing sight. Certainly not recommended.

LE FOTO DI GIOIA PHOTO OF GIOIA

Director: Lamberto Bava. Sc: Gianfranco Clerici, Daniele Stoppa. Mus: Simon Boswell. Cast: Serena Grandi, Daria Nicolodi, Vanni Corbellini, David Brandon, Capucine, George Eastman (Luigi Montefiori).

Rating: ★★

Comments: Serena Grandi (the Dolly Parton of Italy) stars as Gioia, a model for Pussycat, a skin magazine. Several of her co-workers are murdered and she is sent photos of their dead bodies, posed in front of a huge picture of her. The plot is simplicity itself as we are introduced to all the surrounding suspects, such as her director Donnie (Vanni Corbellini), her old flame Alex (George Eastman) and main photographer Robert (David Brandon). Much like TOO BEAUTIFUL TO DIE made the following year, it's her director that is wiping out her friends.

A great cast is wasted here, especially Daria Nicolodi and the late Capucine (who committed suicide soon after this film). They are little more than extended cameos. The fact that Grandi' bust-size is so extensive makes it hard (for me at least) to concentrate on anything else. Bava's direction of this film is quite stylish (and he winks at himself with a nod to DEMONI) but he's severely let down with the by-the-numbers script. One nice twist is that when we see the victim from the killer's POV, we truly get the sense that a warped personality is at work. Not only do we get the cliched colored gel effect, but the victim may have a huge eye or a head like a fly (a nod to Cronenberg no doubt). Claudio Simonetti's frantic score is also a big plus. Instead of just plugging in the latest Heavy Metal shit (a la Argento), Simonetti is allowed to build the stalk and slash sequences to a peak of momentum.

OPERA

TERROR AT THE OPERA

Director: Dario Argento. Sc: Dario Argento, Franco Ferrini.

Mus: Claudio Simonetti. Cast: Cristina Marsillach, Ian Charleson, Urbano Barberini, Antonella Vitale, Barbara Cupisti, Daria Nicolodi.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: Another one that's been covered to death, Marsillach is an opera starlet who is being terrorized by the usual black gloved killer. Who in turn is revealed to be a cop played by Barberini. The gunshot through the peephole/eyeball death of Nicolodi stands up as a true gruesome effect, no matter how many times I've seen it.

1988 PATHOS-SEGRETA INQUIETUDINE

OBSESSION-A TASTE FOR FEAR

Director: Piccio Raffanini. Sc: Lidia Ravera, Piccio Raffanini. Mus: Gabriele Ducros. Cast: Virginia Hey, Gerard Damon, Gioia Scola, Carlo Mucari, Dario Parisini, Eva Grimaldi, Kid Creole.

Rating: ★★★★★

Comments: Giallo-BLADERUNNER style. A marvelous film that I could watch repeatedly and never tire of. Along with DEATH LAID AN EGG, this is the best film on the list and the one to see. It's a true winner in the style-over-content parade. Although it doesn't call attention to itself, the film is set in a not too distant future where drugs and bisexuality are the norm. Diane (Virginia Hey, from MAD MAX 2) is a photographer, who, though difficult to work with, is considered the best. She is always striving for the offbeat and weird which includes her pick of models and what they wear. Her choice of Teagan (a muscled up androgynous woman who looks like Stallone with tits) eventually leads to murder when the model is killed during a bondage tape sent to Diane. The opening credits read, "To the one I love." A cop, who is a walking cliché, named Arnold is assigned the case and he takes an instant dislike for Diane and her entire lifestyle (but that doesn't stop her from trying to get him into bed). Diane's ex-husband produces bondage tapes and is the most likely suspect (meaning of course he's innocent). When Teagan's roommate Kim (a big, beautiful black woman who's as bald as Telly Savalas) is murdered and taped, George (Diane's ex) is able to use his sophisticated equipment to reveal the murderer to be Diane's assistant, Paul. It seems that he was (here we go again) disgusted by her lifestyle and so killed off those who he saw as threats to her purity (something she probably lost around 13 years of age).

With all the hoopla going on these days about BASIC INSTINCT, here's a film that if, given a wide release and any amount of publicity, would have special interest groups shitting blood. This is a film that needs to be played with the volume turned way up as the score by Ducros is a sonic delight (and thank you Robert Lewis for the audio cassette). The SciFi trappings are just that, but certainly help to put across that feeling of off-centeredness. When Diane and Kim go to a gay nightclub looking for a friend of Tegan's, you'll think you've entered a Ranexerex Comic (and damn if there aren't drawings of that character by Liberatore on the curtains). Look for Eva Grimaldi in a wordless cameo as one of George's toys/models.

SOTTO IL VESTITO NIENTE 2

TOO BEAUTIFUL TO DIE

Director: Dario Di Piana. Sc: Dario Di Piana, Claudio Mancini, Achille Manzotti. Mus: Roberto Cacciapaglia. Cast: Florence Guerin, Francois Eric Gendron, Randi Ingermann, Gioia Maria Scola, Carl Mucari, Dario Parisini.

Rating: ★★☆☆

Comments: A group of models are invited to a party at the home of a rich pervert. One of the models, Sylvia, refuses to become involved in the sexual hi-jinks and abruptly leaves. Three hours later she is found dead in a car crash a few miles from the party. A further investigation reveals a bullet through her skull. A music video director named David had big plans for Sylvia and so now is forced to find a new leading lady. He spots Melanie (Florence Guerin) at the local disco and auditions her, successfully, for the part. Meanwhile, the three other models who were at the party with Sylvia, along with their pimp/manager Alex, are being killed off in a most gruesome manner.

The motion picture rushes to its climax as we discover that Melanie is Sylvia's sister, thus making us wonder if she is the murderer, getting revenge for her sister's death. It ends with David being revealed as an insane megalomaniac who claims to be God. Thus, when he discovered that Sylvia had been corrupted he killed her and those responsible for her fall from His grace. One of the more successful thrillers from this late time frame, it's obvious Piana has studied the camera technique of Brian De Palma. He steady-cam's your brains out by allowing the camera to float across time and space. Piana started out as a costume designer and like his American contemporary Joel Schumacher (FLATLINERS), knows how to make a film reflect a stylish sensibility. Unlike other contemporary attempts in this genre, TOO BEAUTIFUL TO DIE doesn't forget the ingredients of sex and violence. Florence Guerin is one of the most beautiful actresses now working in Italy and wonder of wonders, she can even act. For an even more eye opening performance, catch her in THE CLICK, based on the Milo Manara comic of the same name. The music by Cacciapaglia rips off PSYCHO for the umpteenth time.

1989 UN GATTO NEL CERVELLO

NIGHTMARE CONCERT aka A CAT IN THE BRAIN

Director: Lucio Fulci. Sc: Lucio Fulci, John Fritzsims, Antonio Tentori. Mus: Fabio Frizzi. Cast: Lucio Fulci, Joffrey Kennedy, J.L. Thompson, Harrison Lang, Raia Simon.

Rating: ★

Comments: While this film is fun to laugh at, it represents the most callous attitude to its intended audience I've ever seen. Fulci's usual editor, Vincenzo Tomassi, had to work miracles to get this crazy quilt of a film to mesh. It's basically a simple tale about a horror film director named and played by Lucio Fulci, who thinks he's going mad. He has hallucinations involving gore scenes from his movies while murders are taking place all around him. The murders are actually performed by a psychiatrist, who was driven insane by his philandering wife. He has hypnotized Fulci into thinking he is performing the murders. The police discover who the real killer is and put a bullet through the good doctor's brain (Fulci's comment on the profession?). The "nightmare" sequences are all from other horror films and are dripping with cheesy gore. In the proud tradition of Ed Wood, Fulci unsuccessfully matches footage of the killer in this film with the one that appears in the others. Frizzi's score is recycled from the films of Fulci's heyday (THE BEYOND and others) just to remind us how far he's sunk. Most of the original footage for this film consists of Fulci walking around or driving his car. A pathetic fucking film and one that seriously impairs further appreciation of what's left of Fulci's talent.

LA MORTE E DI MODA

(no known English Language title)

Director: Joe Brenner (Bruno Gaburro). Sc: Luciano Appignani. Mus: Filippo Trecca. Cast: Anthony Franciosa, Miles O'Keefe, Teresa Leopardi, Marina Giulia Cavalli, Timothy Brent (Giancarlo Prete).

Rating: ★

Comments: Gloria works as a model and one night, during a thunderstorm, she has car trouble. She finds an old house where she hopes to be able to call for help. Inside she witnesses an act of murder that causes her to faint and temporarily lose her memory of the incident (no doubt due to the fact that she was hit by a truck). Her doctor recommends she see her lover, a psychiatrist named Marco (Miles O'Keefe), to help recover her memory. Meanwhile she is being terrorized by the proverbial black gloved assassin, nattily attired with ski mask to match. Much time is spent with Gloria and the principals returning to the old house in repeated attempts to pry loose her recollection. At the end she recalls seeing a murder, however it took place over twenty years ago. The killer naturally wants to wipe out her being able to implicate him (he turns out to be the boss of her modeling agency) and so attempts to lure her back to the house. The Inspector (Tony Franciosa) and Marco show up in time to save Gloria while the killer reveals where he hid the dead body (E. A. Poe's The Black Cat should be a clue).

LAME is the word to describe this TV movie-type concoction. Director Bruno Gaburro may be trying to return to the good ol' days when Italian thrillers were king, but he misses the mark high and wide. When you spend endless minutes watching Anthony Franciosa fish (and lecture us on how to cast your line), you'll question why you're even watching this turkey. Exploitation requirements (ie, Blood and Breasts) are pitifully low (why do do all models have to have eyebrows you could plant corn in?) so even that's no reason to suffer through this boring mess.

1991 OMICIDIO A LUCI BLU

HOMICIDE IN BLUE LIGHT

Director: Al Bradley (Al Brescia). Sc: Al Brescia. Mus: Stefano Curti & Gianluca Bacconi. Cast: Florence Guerin, David Hess, Brian Peterson, Joseph Misiti, Wendy Whindham, Rick Battaglia.

Rating: ★★

Comments: Unfortunately for fans of this genre, Al Brescia is still making films within it. If he can't make a decent film with Florence Guerin and David Hess, the man is truly hopeless. I think it's safe to say that of Al won't be interviewed within the pages of ETC, especially if he were to ever read this issue. The film takes its plot from KLUTE, with Guerin playing the Jane Fonda role as the hooker/model and David Hess in the Donald Sutherland part as the cop. The victims this time are johns for a change, and at the scene of each crime in between the dead man's legs, a grenade is found. It just so happens that Guerin's current flame is an ex-marine named Ted. Hmmm. To catch the killer, Hess disguises himself as Guerin (which isn't as crazy an idea as you might think as Florence has apparently been putting away the groceries these past few years) and discovers that the killer is indeed Ted. It seems he was castrated while serving in Vietnam by a stray grenade and is taking out his obvious frustrations on the NYC male population.

There are numerous episodes of Guerin acting out her clientele's sexual fantasies, but it's all pretty bland stuff. Nothing much here to get excited about, but then this IS an Al Bradley film. What's ya expect?
